where Mrs. Polk, 90, still resides.

Col. Brad Smith, commander of Camp Shelby Joint Forces Training Center, also participated in the ceremony honoring Polk.

"The strength and character of brave Soldiers such as Cpl. Maybert Weir Titus Polk have invoked change and paved a path of opportunities for women in the military,"

Col. Smith said. "It is an honor to celebrate her service and pay tribute to her accomplishments that have been a source of inspiration for women in the military still today."

The Mississippi Armed Forces Museum is featuring a new photographic exhibit honoring women in the military during March, which is Women's History Month. The 45th Women's Army Corps Detachment exhibit showcases the Women's Army Corps training at Camp Shelby during World War II.

Camp Shelby Joint Forces Training Center became a mobilization station in June 2004. The training center continues to meet the challenges of providing for the nation's defense by serving as a Mobilization Force Generating Installation.

Since then, the mission has evolved in planning, developing, and providing a diverse and demanding training environment that evolves constantly to meet the new and emerging threats to our nation's security.

of the Air Force, March 2010; and a Certificate of Flight Achievement – Completion of Aircraft Qualification Course in Sikorsky UH-60M, February 2013. His future career plans include the completion of his bachelor's degree in Science Professional Aeronautics from Embry-Riddle Aeronautical University. He has future goals of completing Readiness Level (RL) Progression training, making Pilot in Command, and eventually becoming an Instructor Pilot.

As one of the Army's newest UH-60M pilots, Boatman would like to share his accomplishments with other Mississippi youth considering attendance to YCA.

"If traditional high school is not working for you, then YCP is a good alternative. The military isn't for everyone, but it does provide some great opportunities for those willing to serve," said Boatman.

Boatman and wife, Allison, have two daughters, Elissa, 5 and Hailey 3. They are expecting a son in June.
