MACG-28 Marines, Sailors return from deployment

LANCE CPL. VICTOR A. ARRIAGA
MCAS CHERRY POINT

More than 200 Marines and Sailors with Marine Air Control Group 28 (Forward) returned to Cherry Point Jan. 13 and 16, ending a seven-month deployment to Afghanistan.

While deployed, MACG-28 provided Marine airspace command and control in support of Regional Command (Southwest), the Afghan military led coalition of U.S. and NATO Forces in southwestern Afghanistan.

“The Marines and Sailors of MACG-28 (Fwd.) performed exceptionally well,” said Maj. Jimmy Hicks, the executive officer of MACG-28 (Fwd.). “Working very long hours, seven days a week and in some very arduous remote conditions, all Marines and Sailors went above and beyond. I’m very proud of everything they accomplished.”

During the deployment, MACG-28 was instrumental in a smooth transition of tactical control of airspace between the Marine Corps and the Air Force. According to Hicks, a highlight of the deployment was the movement of the TPS-59 radar.

“A lot of work was put into the handover of airspace control to the Air Force which enabled us to send home the TPS-59 and the controllers and maintainers responsible for its operation,” said Hicks. “This was significant because it was a sign that we were quickly reducing capability in Afghanistan and coming closer to the end of mission.”

As part of 2nd Marine Aircraft Wing (Fwd.), MACG-28 acted as a force multiplier for all Marine aircraft assets in RC(SW), said Hicks.

Sgt. Michelle Ven Huizen shares a moment with her son at Cherry Point’s Chapel Jan. 13 after returning from a seven-month deployment to Afghanistan. Ven Huizen and more than 200 Marines and Sailors deployed as part of Marine Air Control Group 28 in support of the Afghan-led military operations in southwestern Afghanistan. Ven Huizen is a meteorology and oceanography forecaster with Marine Air Control Squadron 2.

“We were assigned as a subordinate, separate and detached command under 2nd MAW (Fwd.),” he said. “We enabled the flying squadrons of the wing through timely and responsive aviation command and control to process air support requests, coordinate surface fires, positively control aircraft, and maintain the computer networks and systems that support the wing.”

At Cherry Point, family members packed the air station’s chapel to welcome their loved ones home.

“I’m feeling really anxious and excited for him to get back,” said Janelle Williams, wife of Petty Officer Zackary Williams, a corpsman with Marine Air Control Squadron 2. “It’s been so long and I just want him to see us again.”

Donna Wynn made a nine-hour car ride from Georgia with her husband in order to see her son Sgt. James Wynn, a meteorology and oceanography forecaster with Marine Wing Support Squadron 272 out of Marine Corps Air Station New River, N.C., return safely.

“My heart started beating really fast when we made it on to the air station,” said Donna. “I’m ready to see him again and know he is safe.”

Emotions grew as white buses carried Marines and Sailors to the chapel where they reunited with their families.

“It hasn’t sunk in yet that I’m back with my family,” said Wynn. “However, it’s good to be home...it really is.”

Cherry Point Tax Assistance Office provides free services for service members

The Cherry Point Tax Assistance Office opened for all base personnel Jan. 21 to assist service members and their family throughout tax season.

Last year the Cherry Point Tax Assistance Office filed more than 1,200 tax returns totaling more than $262,000 in returns.

Tax representatives train in both state and federal tax procedures through IRS, tax preparation and military income tax preparation classes. These classes ensure that all tax assistants stand ready to assist people with their tax paying responsibilities.

“We are required to attend a series of classes which I feel help us in the interview process to identify deductions that may have been missed or overlooked,” said 1st Lt. Evan Field, officer-in-charge with the Legal Service Support Center. “Our interview process allows us to sit one on one and really understand the situation they are in so we can save them the most money and increase their return so they receive the maximum refund they are entitled to.”

Before coming to the tax office service members should ensure they have with them all required documents by either calling the office or referring to the checklist online, said Field.

“By coming into the office prepared with all the necessary documents the process will go smoother and it will reduce the chance of a Marine or Sailor having to leave to retrieve other documents,” said Field.

Patrons must bring military identification, Social Security Cards or photocopies for themselves and their dependants. All W-2 and 1099 forms and custody, divorce and separation documents must be presented as well. In addition, all supporting documents to include receipts, statements, charitable gifts, tuition fees, moving records and self-employment records must be presented upon visiting the tax center.

“We understand all the little ins-and-outs of what to look for to maximize the returns for military personnel,” said Cpl. Brad Berube, a tax assistant with VMR-1. “I feel absolutely prepared to file the taxes of all the residents of Cherry Point and if there is something we can’t do here in our office we will refer you to someone who does have the information you need.”

The IRS begins sending tax returns as early as Jan. 31 so the sooner you file, the sooner you will get a return, said Berube. Service members may access and print their W-2s online at <https://mypay.dfas.mil/mypay.aspx>.

MACS-2 bids Schaefer farewell, welcomes Fox

LANCE CPL. VICTOR A. ARRIAGA
MCAS CHERRY POINT

Marine Air Control Squadron 2 welcomed a new sergeant major during a relief and appointment ceremony Friday at their headquarters building at Cherry Point.

Sgt. Maj. Nicholas G. Fox relieved Sgt. Maj. Douglas B. Schaefer as sergeant major for MACS-2.

“It’s been a pleasure serving with you guys,” said Schaefer. “I appreciate all of your professionalism and I couldn’t be prouder to have been a part of this squadron.”

Schaefer has been with MACS-2 since June 2013 and will be moving on to the 15th Marine Expeditionary Unit at Marine Corps Base Camp Pendleton, Calif.

“I can tell you that the Marines of MACS-2 are awesome, impressive and smart,” Schaefer said.

Fox is no stranger to the squadron, having previously served as the first sergeant for Marine Wing Communications Squadron 28. With Fox returning to familiar territory as sergeant major, he will continue to bring greatness with him, said Schaefer.

“This is going to be my first rodeo as sergeant major,” said Fox. “We are going to take it one day at a time, but because I’ve served with you before when I was at the communications squadron, this is more of a homecoming for me.”

Fox was assigned as a first sergeant with 2nd Reconnaissance Battalion at Camp Pendleton before returning to Cherry Point.

“I look forward to serving with you guys again,” said Fox. “I’ve got nothing to worry about because you guys are top notch.”

HITT center undergoes renovations, classes relocated to Marine Dome

Cherry Point’s Semper Fit began renovations on the High Intensity Tactical Training Center Jan. 15 with a scheduled reopening in May.

The new HITT Center will feature two large rooms packed with rubber flooring, acoustic tiles and a booming sound system, said Vicky Lee, the Semper Fit fitness program coordinator.

“We were operating out of four racquetball courts which really limited us to how many people we could train,” she said. “With these improvements, the center will be wider and have a lot more open space allowing us to have more people at once.”

HITT will continue as normal during all renovations, said Lee.

“Getting these renovations done is a good sign that Semper Fit is trying to grow the HITT program and get a better facility for the Marines and Sailors,” said Ken Rose, a HITT instructor for Semper Fit. “In the meantime, we will have classes at the Marine Dome where we already noticed we have

Changes to UCMJ

The National Defense Authorization Act signed Dec. 26, 2013, by President Barack Obama, requires sweeping changes to the Uniform Code of Military Justice, particularly in cases of rape and sexual assault.

Key provisions of the UCMJ rewritten under the NDAA for fiscal year 2014 are Articles 32, 60, 120 and 125.

The law now requires the services to have judge advocates serve as Article 32 investigating officers. The 2014 National Defense Authorization Act gives the services one year to phase in the change to Article 32, stipulating that where practicable, judge advocates conduct the investigations.

Like Article 32, modifications to Article 60 will be phased in over the course of 12 months. Article 60 involves pretrial agreements and actions by the convening authority in modifying or setting aside findings of a case or reducing sentencing.

Articles 120 and 125 now have mandatory minimum punishments, dishonorable discharge for enlisted service members and dismissal for officers. In addition, the accused now must appear before a general court-martial with no opportunity to be tried at a summary or special court-martial.

AHRN loses DOD affiliation

The Automated Housing Referral Network lost its Department of Defense affiliation Jan. 1 for failing to comply with DOD information technology and information assurance requirements.

The AHRN has been the DOD and Department of Homeland Security’s preferred web based housing referral system within the United States since 2004.

Service members may still be able to log on but property managers and landlords may choose not to maintain current rental listings.

The Marine Corps and other services are working together to develop a new referral service to meet DOD requirements. There will be a six-month period between AHRN’s loss of affiliation and the availability of a permanent solution.

From January to June, service members should use their respective housing office to address individual housing requirements. Additionally, an updated rental housing information database will be available at the Family Housing Referral Office through Electronic Military Housing.

Chaplain’s Corner

Don’t tread on me

CMDR. PHIL PELIKAN
MCAS CHERRY POINT COMMAND CHAPLAIN

Having now remembered and celebrated the birthday of Dr. Martin Luther King Jr., who fought for freedom and equality, not through armed conflict, but with reason, civility, and passion, I mourn his death as well. I was in high school in 1968 when Dr. King was assassinated, and I can still remember the confusion we all felt in the aftermath. Why was this man of peace and unity, dedicated to the equality of all human beings, gunned down like an animal? We had just barely recovered from the shock of our President’s assassination just a few years before, and so it seemed like everyone who wanted to make some sort of positive change in our country became a candidate for “elimination”. And when Bobby Kennedy was killed in my home town of Los Angeles, I knew something was really amiss.

Despite these sad memories, I remember the fight that our founding fathers had, for not only the freedom of our country, but for its unity as well. Benjamin Franklin is quoted to have quipped at the time, “We must all hang together, or most assuredly we shall all hang separately.” Little did he know that in the distant future, men like JFK, Dr. King, and Bobby, would be “hanged” separately because they dared to push us further than our founding fathers were able to in their time. So today, we have our own set of challenges. We’re not only waging a “War on Terror” abroad and at home, but we are still in a fight for the unity, the equality of individuals, and to some extent, our very identity as a nation that in many ways was personified in the aforementioned men.

At the time of the founding of our nation, the early Americans rallied ‘round a rather peculiar symbol which was eventually placed on what was essentially an early national flag. That symbol was a coiled snake, with the words “Don’t Tread on Me” beneath it. There is a scripture in the New Testament that refers to Christ giving authority to His disciples to be able to “tread on serpents and scorpions,” because they were symbols of evil in the Judaic tradition. And as I thought about that verse, I began to wonder why the United States chose the “serpent” as the symbol on one of the earliest flags of our nation.

Well, chalk another one up to good ‘ole Benjamin Franklin. In 1751, he wrote a satirical commentary in his “Pennsylvania Gazette” suggesting that as a way to thank the Brits for their policy of sending convicted felons to America, American colonists should send rattlesnakes to England! I thought, “good job, Ben!” But it still didn’t answer my question. Then I read about another thing he did three years later. He used the snake to illustrate another point. Ben Franklin sketched, carved, and published the first known political cartoon in an American newspaper. It was the image of a snake cut into eight sections. The sections represented the individual colonies, and the curves of the snake suggested the coastline. New England combined into one section as the head of the snake. South Carolina was at the tail, and in between were all of the other 13 colonies (some of the pieces had more than one colony’s name on it). Beneath the snake were the ominous words “Join or Die.” Now this had nothing to do with independence from Britain, however, but was instead a plea for unity in defending the colonies during the French and Indian War. It played off a common superstition of the time that said, “...a snake that

Denying Orders

Question: I was wondering if you are allowed to deny or turn down Temporary Additional Duty (TAD) orders. Also, who is allowed to TAD a Marine to another unit and how does that process work?

Answer: Marines cannot deny or turn down any lawful orders, Temporary Addition Duty (TAD), Permanent Change of Assignment or Station, or otherwise. Denying or turning down orders is a violation of Article 90 of the UCMJ and could result in a court martial or nonjudicial punishment.

TAD Orders are issued by a commanding officer or their appointed official and the orders are executed for the period directed on the orders.

Ask IPAC Cherry Point was established to give Marines aboard the Air Station the ability to ask personnel administration related questions. This initiative is for information purposes only. Personnel requiring personal administrative action should see their unit S-1 for guidance. The e-mail address for Ask IPAC Cherry Point is CHPT_IPAC_OMB@usmc.mil.

Courts-martial are rare at Cherry Point. When they do happen, Lance Cpl. Kevin C. Ngo is ready to transcribe everything that is said during judicial proceedings.

Ngo, a San Leandro, Calif. native, speaks into a microphone to record everything he says onto his laptop using a voice writing program.

“Whenever there is a court-martial or any similar hearing, it is my job to capture and record everything that is being said,” said Ngo, a court reporter with Headquarters and Headquarters Squadron. “We then document it and send it on its way to the next level of the case.”

According to Ngo, using the voice writing program is his favorite part of his job, but sometimes it can be difficult.

“We have people that talk really fast or try to talk over each other,” he said. “But it’s my job to catch it and get it done.”

Ngo says his job is important because if he slows down at any point, he could affect the outcome of official proceedings.

“If I don’t do my job and capture everything that is said or lose a piece of audio, they could potentially throw the case out and let someone walk away,” he said.

Each year, Marines practice and qualify with their issued service rifles, testing their understanding of basic marksmanship from known distances up to 500 yards.

Marines also test their understanding of close quarter combat, firing at targets from a mere 25 yards.

Table one and table two give an accurate assessment of a Marine’s abilities with the M16A4 service rifle or the M4A1 carbine service rifle

Table one is a known distance course of fire while table two tests static combat marksmanship.

Table three, however, is not an annual training requirement, reserved for the Marines slated for deployment, according to Sgt. Terrance M. Ryan, a combat marksmanship trainer and a Cherry Point rifle range noncommissioned officer-in-charge.

“The purpose of table three is to make the Marines movements more natural if they find themselves in a combat environment,” said Ryan, from Headquarters and Headquarters Squadron temporarily assigned to the range. “Many of the Marines who attend table three are working up to deployment.”

Combat marksmanship coaches, who help train and assist Marines refine their marksmanship abilities, are the key to this refresher course.

Unlike table one and table two, table three focuses on a Marine’s ability to prioritize and engage targets while on the move, said Ryan.

“Table three is what Marines do,” said Ryan. “It compresses all the fundamentals Marines learn from the first two tables, but places you in a position you’re more likely to see outside the wire.”

One of Ryan’s duties as a combat marksmanship trainer is to explain the detail of how and why a weapon is effective, including weapons handling and ballistics. Ryan also oversees and instructs several marksmanship coaches who assist Marines during all courses of fire.

“The coaches work hard in a group effort to provide guidance and safety for the range,” said Cpl. Justin Vinson, a marksmanship coach.

This training reinforces and refines marksmanship skills Marines may have lost over time, said Vinson.

“[Table three] isn’t about marksmanship,” said Vinson. “It’s about combat shooting.”

“This range provides a strong stepping-stone in preparing Marine for deployment and, if necessary, combat,” said Vinson.

Committed & Engaged Corporals learn the ropes

Two hundred seventy-one corporals from the 3rd Marine Aircraft Wing and Marine Corps Air Station Miramar, Calif., participating in the Corporals Committed and Engaged Leadership Indoctrination course, pose for a photo by the newly constructed obstacle course aboard Marine Corps Air Station Miramar, Calif., Jan. 9. The committed and engaged leadership of two noncommissioned officers with Marine Tactical Air Command Squadron 38, Sgt. Mark Sanchez, a tactical data systems administrator and Sgt. Mark Willoughby, an air intercept controller, helped to influence the decision to build the obstacle course.

MARINE CORPS AIR STATION MIRAMAR, Calif. – Corporals of the 3rd Marine Aircraft Wing and Marine Corps Air Station Miramar, Calif., reached new heights during the Corporals Committed and Engaged Leadership Indoctrination course aboard MCAS Miramar, Jan. 7-9.

The corporals indoctrination course added a new element to the three-day schedule by incorporating the recently constructed obstacle course.

“The [obstacle] course works for motivation,” said Gunnery Sgt. Jorge L. Valdez, an instructor for the corporals indoctrination course and the inbound staff noncommissioned officer for Installation Personnel Administrative Center. “It gives the corporals something else to talk about when they return to their shops.”

With special ties to the Committed and Engaged Leadership initiative, the obstacle course, which opened Jan. 6, stands as a reminder of the power of the committed and engaged noncommissioned officer.

Sgt. Mark Sanchez, a tactical data systems administrator with Marine Tactical Air Command Squadron 38, originally noted the air station’s lack of an obstacle course. When 3rd MAW Commanding General Maj. Gen. Steven Busby came to the squadron, fellow NCO Sgt. Mark Willoughby, an air intercept controller with MTACS-38, raised the question to the general.

“At that point, the CG took action.” said Sanchez.

The obstacle course took more than two months to build, but is now available for Marines and Sailors to use for years to come.

“It’s a big deal because of Sanchez and Willoughby, standing up and taking care of each other and saying ‘hey, taking care of fellow Marines, we need this. Do this for us,’” said Busby.

The Corporals Committed and Engaged Leadership Indoctrination course presents new noncommissioned officers with an opportunity to get back to basics by going to the field for three days.

“If the Marine Corps continues with this, there will be big changes for NCOs,” said Valdez. “This allows newly promoted corporals to receive the necessary tools to work with as NCOs.”

The course reinforces lessons learned from their first days stepping on the yellow footprints at recruit training, to gaining new knowledge needed for their journey as a new NCO. Several mentors are assigned to guide the corporals through discussions using their wisdom, as well as engaging the NCOs in scenarios requiring critical thinking.

“The people we need to fix the [problems] are noncommissioned officers,” said Busby. “Therefore, we need to invest in [them]. So, we asked ourselves ‘what are we doing to prepare them?’ That is where the first Staff Sergeants Symposium came from and now, the corporals indoctrination.”

The course, part of the Committed and Engaged Leadership initiative, was originated by Busby and serves as a precursor to the three-week Corporals Course.

MWSS-171 Marines prepare for Exercise Cobra Gold

IWAKUNI, Japan – Marines with combat engineer company, Marine Wing Support Squadron 171, prepare to go to Thailand aboard Marine Corps Air Station, Iwakuni, Japan, Jan. 15, 2014, to participate in Exercise Cobra Gold.

Exercise Cobra Gold is a multi-national, joint exercise, conducted annually in Thailand and is comprised of forces from participating nations including: Thailand, Singapore, Indonesia, Japan, South Korea, Malaysia, and the United States. China will also be participating in the exercise as an observing nation.

Engineers with MWSS-171 will construct schools to increase operational readiness during Exercise Cobra Gold.

“In addition to building structures and providing schools, we’re going to be facilitating the interoperability and the relationships between the United States Marine Corps, the Singapore armed forces and the Royal Thai Air Force,” said 1st Lt. James D. Woolley, executive officer with engineer company, MWSS-171.

Operations, such as this one, refine Marine Aircraft Group 12’s capability to deploy to potential crisis locations and enhance existing professional relationships amongst allies, allowing more opportunities to work in partnership.

Woolley said the company is part of the Humanitarian and Civic Assistance Program while in Thailand. The HCA Program is comprised of five different units from the Army, the Air Force and the Marine Corps, whose objective is to build schools in various provinces in Thailand.

According to Woolley, while the mission focuses on the tactical level, including military occupational specialty proficiency, training with vertical construction and validating the ability to plan, coordinate and execute the actual structure, it also focuses on the strategic side of operations.

Cpl. Luis JuanDiego, combat engineer with MWSS-171, said this exercise provides an atmosphere beneficial to the growth of the Marines.

“The goal is to have Marines become proficient within their MOS, build a structure from scratch and collaborate with various units,” said JuanDiego. “They can learn how to take charge within leadership roles and enhance their communication skills while working with different units.”

The company received training prior to this exercise, including concrete classes and a rebar class, which consisted of bending and welding steel bars.

“These classes help give us general knowledge of what we’ll be doing in Thailand, such as our concrete pouring and rebaring for structural support,” said Lance Cpl. David

Marines recall ship life, MEU deployment

LANCE CPL. JOSHUA R. HEINS
MCAS CHERRY POINT

Opening his eyes, Cpl. Theodore Manning finds himself on a top sleeping rack with all the high-pitch bells and whistles of a ship going off in his ears. It is six in the morning and there are two Marines underneath him attempting to slide their way out of their racks without once again butting heads. The space is always tight and packed full of other Marines and Sailors attempting to start their day.

This is the everyday life of a Marine or Sailor with the 26th Marine Expeditionary Unit aboard the USS Kearsarge (LHD-3) for eight months. Manning, the operations noncommissioned officer-in-charge while assigned to Marine Medium Tiltrotor Squadron 266 (Reinforced), falls into his daily routine while attempting to adjust to the ships constant sways and sudden rocking.

Waking up in the morning is rough for Marines on a MEU. Every day, crowding bathrooms and a seemingly endless line of hungry service members cueing up for chow on the mess deck of the LHD.

“Luckily we ran split crews, one for the day and the other at night,” said Manning. “So if you got up early enough the foot traffic in the [bathrooms] wasn’t too bad, and you could avoid the rush.”

Manning’s stomach ached for food as he stood in the ridiculous long meal lines

“You would have a line that started at the mess deck, and go all the way back to the gym which was right next to where we slept,” said the Newport News, Va. native. “You would have to catch them at the right time, or know the right people if you wanted to skip the line,” Manning explained with a smirk dashing across his face.

At 8 a.m., the Marines would head to their respective workstations to begin the day.

“Working on the MEU is way different than back home,” said Manning. “We deal with [five different aircraft on the ship] compared to the two we have back home.”

Manning, an aviation operations specialist by trade, tracked and logged flight hours and operations while aboard the Kearsarge, helping ensure routine maintenance in the hangar and safe flight operations on the flight deck, according to Capt. Justin Minick, Manning’s officer-in-charge while deployed.

Minick worked with Manning throughout the deployment as the operations administration officer-in-charge. Both Marines returned to normal duties at Cherry Point’s Marine Light Attack Helicopter Squadron 467 when the 26th MEU returned Stateside in November.

“Our shop did a fantastic job tracking and handling everything that was thrown at them on a daily basis,” said Minick. “It’s a high visibility job and they turned in all data timely and accurately.”

Manning was the only noncommissioned officer from HMLA-467 that attached to VMM-266 (Rein.).

“Cpl. Manning did a phenomenal job out there for us,” said Minick. “He was the one that brought the familiarity to the shop with his knowledge and ability to perform his duties solidly.”

Although this was Manning’s first deployment, it was not his first time on the USS Kearsarge. Manning spent 30 days aboard ship conducting exercises several months before departing in March.

“The pre-deployment training helped with adjusting to ship life. However, no amount of practice could prepare you for the flies in Jordan. Just walking around they would have you covered in seconds,” said Manning, referring to his time ashore in the Kingdom of Jordan.

While on the MEU, Marines and Sailors visited ports and conducted exercises in several nations. During these stops, service members experienced and learned about different cultures and traditions uncommon in the United States.

Flies aside, Manning said liberty ports and exercises ashore were some of his fondest memories of deployment and made the experience worthwhile.

“This was my first time outside of the States which made the experience amazing,” said Manning. “If they give me the chance I would do it all over again.”

2nd MAW squadrons support 3/6 exercise

Marines and Sailors from Cherry Point and Marine Corps Air Station New River coordinated with Marines from 3rd Battalion, 6th Marine Regiment for an aerial insertion exercise at Marine Corps Outlying Field Atlantic, Jan. 13.

During the training, Marine helicopter crews with Marine Heavy Helicopter Training Squadron 302, Marine Heavy Helicopter Squadron 366, HMH-461 and HMH-464, maneuvered to and landed at OLF Atlantic, carrying infantry Marines with 3rd Bn., 6th Marines for assault training.

The aircrews gained valuable insight into the capabilities of their aircraft and the partnership between Marine air and ground assets, according to Capt. Thomas E. Reese, a division lead pilot during the exercise with HMH-366.

Seven CH-53E Super Stallions carried 115 infantrymen, two waves of troops. In a closely timed aerial maneuver, the flight crews landed at OLF Atlantic, delivering their teams of infantry.

“Due to the amount of aircraft involved in this mission, two pilots completed a division leader syllabus training flight,” said Reese. The syllabus training gives division lead pilots the knowledge to manage several aircraft while in flight.

The exercise required several weeks of planning and coordination between the aircraft squadrons and the leadership of 6th Marines. The squadrons’ attention to detail helped facilitate a smooth flow of information and execution during the exercise, according to Reese.

The exercise gave the aircrews, especially the less experienced ones, a chance to collaborate with ground forces. Interoperability between air and ground Marines is critical for both helicopter crews and the Marines they carry for possible future operations, according to Reese.

For the Marines and Sailors conducting the assault from the Super Stallions, the training reinforces a capability most infantry Marines practice routinely. Continuous practice gives the infantry multiple opportunities to refine each of their capabilities as a ground force.

“We are waiting on our next orders,” said Petty Officer 2nd Class Peter Smith, a corpsman with the battalion. “Our only job right now is holding security while the rest of our ground forces arrive.”

The Marines flew in and exited the aircraft as if they were entering a hostile environment.

“Once we landed most of our company began patrols in the direction we were told the enemy was,” said Smith. “The rest of us stayed back for security and as a quick reaction force in case help was needed.”

A division of CH-53E Super Stallions begins to land at Marine Corps Outlying Field Atlantic Jan 13. The aircrafts were performing aerial insertion for 3rd Battalion, 6th Marine Regiment. The Super Stallions belong to Marine Heavy Helicopter Squadron 461.

FUTENMA, Okinawa – CH-53E Super Stallion helicopter and crew members executed confined area landing training Jan. 3 at Marine Corps Air Station Futenma in preparation for future deployments and to maintain the high-level of readiness demanded of their profession.

The helicopters and crew are with Marine Heavy Helicopter Squadron 463, currently assigned to Marine Medium Tiltrotor Squadron 265 (Reinforced), 31st Marine Expeditionary Unit, III Marine Expeditionary Force.

Confined area landing is a technique used by helicopter squadrons when runways or formal landing zones are unavailable, according to Cpl. James J. Eck, a CH-53E crew chief with the squadron.

“These landings are made for dropping off Marines and gear in tactical environments,” said Eck. “Helicopters don’t require a runway to land and are capable of landing in limited areas, which makes it perfect for tactical missions.”

This training was part of the squadron’s preparation for deployments with the 31st MEU, including training in Korea, according to Capt. Brian P. Spillane, a CH-53E pilot and the training officer with the squadron.

“This training helps us by sharpening the skills of our more experienced Marines and developing new skills in our junior Marines,” said Spillane. “This way they’ll be better prepared for real-life scenarios.”

This landing technique is useful for maneuver warfare and disaster relief operations as well, according to Capt. Devin F. Kelly, a CH-53E pilot with the squadron.

“The (Super) Stallions can carry a max weight of 36,000 pounds of personnel and equipment and can land in confined areas,” said Kelly. “This makes them critical for tactical insertions on the battlefield as well as being capable of delivering humanitarian aid, such as food, water and other essentials, to remote villages or (affected) areas.”

The CH-53Es tactical capabilities were used in previous humanitarian and disaster relief operations such as the aid provided after a devastating typhoon in the Philippines and earthquakes in Indonesia in 2009, according to Kelly.

During the training, two CH-53E helicopters departed from MCAS Futenma and flew to the Central Training Area.

“During any operation, the smallest unit we move in is two helicopters,” said Eck. “This way we are capable of supporting each other in case of an emergency. It’s like having a battle buddy; you look out for each other and make sure everyone gets back safely.”

The pilots of the aircraft then landed in several confined landing zones before and returning to MCAS Futenma; successfully completing the training.

“The CH-53E is perfect for both humanitarian and combat scenarios thanks to its landing abilities,” said Kelly. “It is for that reason we train to use every advantage this (aircraft) gives us.”

larger participation just because of the bigger space.”

Lance Cpl. Phillip White, an embark clerk with Marine Air Control Squadron 2, regularly attends HITT classes and is excited for the new changes, he said.

“These renovations mean more sections, which means more people and better workouts,” said White. “This is just better for everyone.”

HITT classes offer a broad range of exercises tailored to build muscle, speed and agility. The classes consist of separate workouts using equipment such as kettle bells, medicine balls, wave ropes and total body resistance exercise, or TRX, suspensions straps.

“If you come to HITT classes, you’re going to get a good workout,” said White.

With the renovations, Lee is excited for the future of the program, she said.

“The advancement of our HITT program is important,” said Lee. “I think with the new renovations we will be able to move forward a little more and continue to grow.”

had been cut into pieces could come back to life if you joined the sections together before sunset.”

The snake illustration was then reprinted throughout the colonies. Dozens of newspapers from Massachusetts to South Carolina ran Franklin’s sketch, or some variation of it. For example, the “Boston Gazette” recreated the snake with the words “Unite and Conquer” coming from its mouth. So, for one reason or another, Franklin’s snake wiggled its way into American culture as an early symbol of unity, and of a shared national identity. Since the early Americans chose this “Biblically negative” image for such “positive” symbolism, it’s no wonder that the plea, “Don’t Tread on Me” became the saying of the day in those early times of our nation, and which continues on into today.

I wanted to share this with you because of the serious issues we’re facing as a country that I’ve previously mentioned. And as we think about ourselves as Americans, and what we’re up against in the “War on Terror,” and how in the spirit of Dr. King, we’re still fighting in some sense for our unity and our very identity as a nation, in this new year, let us pray for our leaders, our country, and our fellow Marines and Sailors who are still in harm’s way. And when we see that old “Don’t Tread on Me” flag, which is still flown on the bow of every ship in the Navy, may we be reminded of all of the struggles through which we’ve come, and all the victories we’ve shared as Americans, defending freedom at home and in all of the far-flung places of the world. We truly have much for which to be thankful, but there is also still much work to be done. And if we persevere, “...we shall overcome.”

May God bless you in this New Year and may God bless America.

31st MEU raids Camp Courtney at night

LANCE CPL. ANDREW KUPPERS

Marines and Sailors with the Maritime Raid Force, 31st Marine Expeditionary Unit, move toward a CH-53E Super Stallion with Marine Medium Tiltrotor Squadron 265 (Reinforced), 31st MEU, to be extracted at the end of a night raid here, Jan. 9. The raid was the first event of the Realistic Urban Training Exercise, which is part of the pre-deployment training for the 31st MEU's regularly scheduled spring patrol. The training is designed and evaluated by Special Operations Training Group, III Marine Expeditionary Force, in order to challenge the full spectrum of MRF capabilities. The 31st MEU is the Marine Corps' force in readiness in the Asia-Pacific region and is the only continuously forward-deployed MEU.

CPL. HENRY ANTENOR
31ST MARINE EXPEDITIONARY UNIT

CAMP COURTNEY, Japan - Cutting through the night, a CH-53E Super Stallion descends to an insertion point and holds its position more than 30 feet from the ground. Ropes fly out of its opened back and the churning wind from the rotors pelts the Marines as they glide to the ground and swiftly set a security perimeter. The assault force closes on its target as the helicopter departs.

Marines with the Maritime Raid Force, 31st Marine Expeditionary Unit, executed a night raid here, Jan. 9, as part of the Realistic Urban Training Exercise. Following insertion by helicopters from Marine Medium Tiltrotor Squadron 265 (Reinforced), 31st MEU, Force Reconnaissance Marines advanced on the targeted facility. Waiting inside was an armed force ready and prepared to resist the MRF advance. A determined enemy firing simulated ammunition provided the realistic combat environment needed for the training.

"To refine our skills, we have to do these realistic hits with live role players," said Cpl. Dru R. Turner, a team medic with FRP, MRF, 31st MEU and a native of Zephyr Hills, Fla. "You're going to act differently if you know there are actual people inside and they are going to shoot back at you. A live enemy (role-player) is going to react to what we're doing and that enhances the training."

The complex raid required the small force to clear and search 27 separate areas while engaging the enemy, managing casualties, securing captured combatants and searching for intelligence.

The training is designed and evaluated by Special Operations Training Group, III Marine Expeditionary Force, in order to challenge the full spectrum of MRF capabilities. Realism combined with complexity is the common theme for SOTG's pre-deployment training package.

"One of our biggest goals, balanced with safety, is to make the training as realistic as possible," said Capt. Kevin P. Jones, the assistant officer-in-charge of the Expeditionary Warfare Branch, SOTG, III MEF, and a native of San Antonio, Texas. "It is called Realistic Urban Training Exercise after all."

After successfully neutralizing the enemy force and gathering valuable intelligence for future RUTEX operations, the Marines again loaded a CH-53E helicopter to extract. Reflecting on their recent actions, both the MRF and their SOTG observers came away with a feeling of satisfaction from the raid.

"There are always things to work on, but they performed to the high level expected of a Maritime Raid Force," said Jones, a native of San Antonio, Texas.

This raid was the first in a series of scenarios for RUTEX and is part of the 31st MEU's pre-deployment training in preparation for their regularly scheduled Spring Patrol.

The 31st MEU is the Marine Corps' force in readiness in the Asia-Pacific region and is the only continuously forward-deployed MEU.

The parade was hosted by the Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr. Scholarship and Awards Committee. The committee held the parade in remembrance of King and his vision of equality.

On August 28, 1963 Rev. Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr. gave his legendary "I have a dream" speech. King's speech both inspires and influences people all over the United States to stand for something and fall for nothing. More than 50 years later, his words and legacy provide the fuel to keep his dream alive.

Dr. Martin Luther King Jr. Scholarship and Awards Committee held its 21st annual Martin Luther King, Jr. Day Parade in New Bern Jan. 18, giving New Bern locals a chance to gather and remember the impact King has across social boundaries, according to Lois Jamison, an event coordinator for the parade.

"This parade gives us as a community, the young and elderly, all races and nationalities a chance to come together, laugh and have fun and just enjoy one another's company," said Jamison.

The parade consisted of groups and organizations from Carteret, Craven, Jones and Pamlico Counties. There were even guests from New York and South Carolina that participated and supported the parade.

As the parade made its way through the community more members started lining up to appreciate the seldom-noticed melting pot that is New Bern.

"There were a good mix of ethnic groups, a lot of community groups and organizations and it went very well," said Deborah A. Maisonet, a recreation assistant with Cherry Point's Single Marine Program.

While Maisonet was there to assist Marines, she was proud to be included in the parade and felt it was a privilege to take part in the parade.

The parade was a cross section of diverse people who came together to enjoy a specific event, according to Jamison.

"I think it was a wonderful experience," said Jamison.

Leading the parade were Grand Marshals Eileen Dove and Buzzy Stubbs, followed by the Young Marines of New Bern. The parade also included the Single Marine Program, Rick Ruffin Cowboys and WIKS-FM Kiss 102.

Themed "Stay in the struggle," the parade gave the community a chance to come together for a day of fun in remembrance of a civil rights icon, according to Jamison.

Every two seconds in the United States a patient needs a blood transfusion. Very often, there is not enough blood or the right type of blood available to accommodate those who need it, according to Wendy Binder, a public affairs specialist with the armed services blood program at NHC Camp Lejeune. Ultimately, blood donations save the lives of thousands of people across the country, she said. Lucas is a general duty corpsman with the air station's Naval Health Clinic.

Daytona Rising makeover hopes to improve superspeedway racing experience for fans at World Center of Racing Traveling down International Speedway Boulevard, the main thoroughfare behind the main grandstands at Daytona International Speedway, signs of a major construction project are everywhere.

There are numerous cranes set up behind the existing grandstands, and the steel frames of new facilities are in place. It looks like a massive expansion of the track's seating capacity, but the fact is that when it's all done, there will actually be fewer seats.

The Daytona Rising project, a $400 million makeover of the 2.5-mile superspeedway facility, instead is intended to improve the experience for the fans attending races at the World Center of Racing.

Among the changes being made between now and the start of the 2016 racing season are the creation of five new entrances, which will lead to a series of elevators and escalators that will take fans to three different concourse levels.

The finished product will feature 101,000 seats, twice as many restrooms as before and three times the number of concession stands, social areas on each of the concourses and 60 suites. The grandstands on the backstretch will be removed once the work on the front side is finished.

Track officials say that as their fan base ages, it's important for spectators to be able to access their seats high above the race track without having to climb numerous flights of stairs. They say the escalators are the most popular part of the project among fans they've surveyed.

While construction proceeds during the next two months, track officials are planning to make sure this year's visitors aren't overly inconvenienced.

"We are proud of the progress thus far on the Daytona Rising project and equally excited to welcome fans for the start of the 2014 racing season," Daytona International Speedway President Joie Chitwood III said. "They will get an up-close and personal look at all the progress we've made to date and, hopefully, they will share in the excitement that we've felt since the groundbreaking in July."

Chitwood also pointed out that the crossover gate from the frontstretch grandstands to the infield in the tri-oval has been reworked to try to prevent an incident like the one last February in which Kyle Larson's car flew into the air and snagged the old crossover gate. The impact sent parts of his car flying into the spectator area, injuring 28 fans, 14 of whom were treated at a local hospital. Even the engine of his car wound up on the interior grandstand walkway used by fans.

The new crossover eliminates the temporary stairway and gate opening. Now the wall and SAFER barrier will be fixed so that they will swing open and fans will walk under the catchfence and up a few steps into the grandstands after attending pre-race festivities in the infield.

The project underway was a big topic of discussion among those in the garage for Preseason Thunder testing.

Eddie Wood, co-owner of the No. 21 Ford driven by Trevor Bayne, compared it to what his father Glen Wood and his fellow drivers must have felt when they drove through the track's tunnel in 1959 and saw the giant speedway for the first time.

"At that time, it was the biggest race track they'd ever seen," he said. "Before that, the biggest track they'd raced on was Darlington."

"I'm sure they were as impressed by the bigness of it then as we are today by the construction that's going."

NASCAR Hall of Fame updates Glory Road exhibit with classic cars from stock car racing's past

The NASCAR Hall of Fame in Charlotte, N.C., has changed out its Glory Road exhibit of race cars from the sport's past. Eighteen different cars now appear on the exhibit, which encircles the Great Hall and features different degrees of banking meant to simulate that seen on the tracks of NASCAR.

The new lineup features all six generations of NASCAR's race cars.

Among the cars now on display are Marshall Teague's 1952 Hudson Hornet, Buck Baker's 1950 "Black Widow" Chevrolet, and the highly modified 1966 Ford Galaxy driven by Fred Lorenzen and nicknamed the "Banana Car" because of its aerodynamically superior — but eventually illegal — shape.

The Wood Brothers' 1971 Mercury driven by David Pearson has been swapped out for a 1961 Ford Starliner, a car that was built as a tribute to the team, which has two members — founder Glen Wood and his brother, Leonard — in the Hall of Fame.

Len Wood, one of the current co-owners of the team, said he and his crew started with four street-legal but well-worn Starliners and built one exactly like the one his father drove on the NASCAR circuit back in the day.

His uncle, Leonard Wood, the team's longtime crew chief, built many of the racing-related parts for the car.

NASCAR historian Buz McKim, also an accomplished artist, lettered the car just as it would have appeared decades ago.

Also on exhibit are David Pearson's 1969 Ford Torino Cobra Talladega, Bobby Allison's 1973 Chevrolet Chevelle, Dale Earnhardt's 1990 Chevrolet Lumina, Jeff Gordon's 1994 Lumina, Bill Elliott's 2001 Dodge Intrepid and Matt Kenseth's 2013 Toyota Camry.

More detail on each car can be found at nascarhall.com/explore/glory-road. Tickets to the NASCAR Hall of Fame can be purchased by calling 877-231-2010 or at nascarhall.com.

Expectations on the increase for Danica Patrick as she enters her first non-rookie season in NASCAR

The rookie stripe has come off the bumper of Danica Patrick's No. 10 Chevrolet, and with that change comes increased expectations for the car's driver.

The desire for improved performance comes from Patrick's crew chief Tony Gibson and her team, from fans and from Patrick herself.

"I think that we all have the same goal, so it's all healthy criticism," Patrick said. "I always want it. I want to know what to do to be better. And I do think that the pressure builds more and more each year because there's less and less excuses."

Last year, Patrick started on the pole for the season-opening Daytona 500 and finished eighth in the race. But after that, her results were more typical of a rookie with limited experience in NASCAR-type cars. Her second-best finish was a 12th at Martinsville Speedway, and she finished the season with an average start of 30.1, an average finish of 26.1, and wound up 27th in the final points standings.

This year, besides bringing the optimism that comes with a fresh start, sees her with two new teammates at Stewart-Haas Racing — Kevin Harvick and Kurt Busch — and the expected return of team co-owner Tony Stewart, who has been out of action with a badly broken leg.

"I feel like we have a lot of really cool stuff going on at the team and a lot of really interesting changes and new drivers and new personnel," Patrick said. "I don't know if anybody is as excited as Kevin Harvick is right now. He seems just super-excited. But everybody is really looking forward to the year, and I think we all feel a lot of opportunity ahead of us."

She went on to say that having two former champions — Stewart and Busch — on the team, plus a perennial championship challenger like Harvick, can only help her effort.

"I feel like we've got a bigger team," she said. "It brought in new people, new ideas, new approaches, a new energy, and I think as far as drivers go, they're going to be able to lead the way really well."

"They all have a ton of experience, and it's just bigger. I think that this is going to be a year for opportunity, really. I think that for me, I'm able to feed off of their experience and making the car better."

And for Patrick — who has far less experience than her teammates — there are still some basic areas that she feels she can improve on.

"I need to work on — still — a lot of the same stuff that I was working on from the beginning of last year," she said. "Improving on qualifying, which I think that we did through the end of the year last year, a little more. We started to get into a good pattern with that."

Patrick said that in 2013, she and her team sometimes made drastic changes to the chassis setup in search of more speed, but found that making gradual changes worked best.

"Working more methodically at the end of the year seemed to help that," she said, adding that "getting more comfortable in those first laps qualifying, first start of the race, restarts, all those things, they all kind of go hand-in-hand, and those are the areas that I have to work on."

And she said she'll be the first to admit that she's not yet ready to win regularly at the Sprint Cup level.

"I think what you're always going to get from all of us, and that's honesty," she said. "That's the truth. I'm not there yet. I'm not in a position to win every weekend. That's going to take some time."

"I'm in a fortunate position that I have three teammates that can win every weekend and make it to the Chase. That's incredible for me to be able to learn from those very strong characters that are going to really help the team go in the right direction and teach me how to do that."

Danica Patrick has more experience on her side entering the 2014 NASCAR season.
