Why did I volunteer to come

By Lt Col Dave Cowan

407th Expeditionary Operations Support Squadron Commander

Why am I here, volunteering to take an extended leave from my airline pilot job, in sunny Ali Base, Iraq? Quite simply because there was a help wanted request that came my way, with my qualifications on it, and the personnel center indicated they were short of people. So I am here for a third of a year. Why would I do such a thing? Because somebody has to get the job done, I've been trained, and it's my turn to pay back Uncle Sam a little bit for all the advantages of living in the United States. Somebody has to do it, and I've never been in the practice of saying "not me." Really, every one of us is a volunteer for this adventure, even if we did not sign up for Ali this year.

Lt Col Dave Cowan

Only a small percentage of the U.S. population serves in the military, and even beyond that — only a small group actually deploys. I transferred to the airlift business about 15 years ago, and have been the "deployer," but never the "deployee." Having been off active duty since 1992 or so, I am surprised at the expertise and diligence of all the active duty "volunteers" here. Either I'm getting really old, and fast, or the Air Force is continuing to entrust more and more responsibility to younger and younger people holding more junior rank. When I was first in the Air Force, in the Strategic Air Command, you had to be a field grade officer to be an aircraft commander. That meant captains were copilots, until and unless they made major, at which time they would be upgraded to "in-charge" status. We had master sergeants as crew chiefs. The minimum gunner on a bomber crew was a second term guy, and that meant that generally speaking, a tech sergeant was an apprentice gunner. My gunner was a master sergeant. All over the base, the guys junior to the masters were apprentices. I find that deployed in Iraq, the world has been turned completely upside down. Here at Ali, master sergeants and down are running separate branches of major organizations — and getting the mission done matter-of-fact on a daily basis with the skills and leadership they have learned.

Every generation is always worried what the next is going to be like — whether they are going to be capable or if the world is going to go down hill. I am pleasantly surprised that the youth of America has produced such a strong, smart, and dedicated group of Airmen that I see here today. Not only that, but you are doing the job with a whole lot less people than I've been used to. There are a lot less supervisors, and far fewer levels of oversight. What was the apprentice level when I started my Air Force adventure is the independent practitioner now. In the 407 EOSS, the Airmen running the lower third of Iraq's Air Traffic Control are pretty junior rank wise, but very senior skill and expertise wise. They are operating equipment from the 1960's, being used in ways never imagined when the equipment was built, and getting the job done — everyday — as if it was no big deal dealing with airspace that's a lot scarier now that I know about it than when I was flying through it. It's pretty intimidating for an old pilot to see one controller with 30 targets on an old green screen that they are controlling. They never stop talking. I don't think I could ever do it. Everywhere in the squadron, and certainly everywhere at Ali it's pretty much the same. Each of the squadrons here are similar — junior folks doing jobs once done by Airmen with much more tenure, experience, and rank — and getting the job done right the first time!

So if I had any misgivings about what might happen to America when old geezers like myself fade away, they've been totally erased by a big jolt of active duty culture experienced by this old crusty reservist. I think that my report is as follows: We're going to be OK, because some of America's sharp youth have picked up the flag and they are carrying the load of defending freedom for the rest of the citizens of the United States. In short: I am honored to have served with you.

The Women of Professional Concept donated a wheelchair and some toys to a local Iraqi fireman for his son to use at the Ali Base Fire Department recently.

Maj. Ahmed Kader Mohsen, a local Iraqi fireman has a son who does not have a wheelchair and cannot get around without the assistance of others.

Through his interpreter, Maj Mohsen said he was honored to receive the wheelchair, and his son will be so happy when he brings it home.

The group obtained the wheelchair from a relative of an Airman who was deployed here during a previous rotation.

“Master Sergeant Ruby Zarzyczny, her Aunt Dorothy and Uncle Marvin Smith were able to have a wheelchair donated from a medical supply company,” said SrA Jeana Pecukonis, 407th Expeditionary Operations Support Squadron.

Sergeant Zarzyczny was involved with the group during AEF 1/2 and is credited with coming up with idea and with the help from the members of the POWC and others the idea came to life.

After months of coordinating and searching the wheelchair finally arrived but before it could be presented it had to be put together.

However in order to get it here, the wheelchair had to be taken apart and put into two different boxes in order to ship it to Iraq. After picking up the boxes, the AFOSI detachment here put it together and arranged a meeting with Maj Mohsen for the presentation.

“I think it is a great way to build relationships with the Iraqi people and show them we really are here to help,” SrA Pecukonis said. “We wanted to be able to help the people in the community and wish there was more we could do to help them help themselves.”

U.S. Air Force's top fugitive in custody

BANGKOK, Thailand (AFPN) — A man suspected of the 1994 murder of his wife and unborn child was taken into custody by the Royal Thai Police at approximately 2:30 p.m. Bangkok time today.

A former U.S. Air Force sergeant assigned to Travis Air Force Base, Calif., Saner Wonggoun fled the country in January 1994 when authorities in Marin County, Calif., wanted to question him in the murder investigation of Sopha (Yodpet) Wonggoun and her unborn child, found wrapped in a sleeping bag and dumped along a deserted road off Highway 1 in Marin County.

"This is a great day now that we have the Air Force's number one fugitive in custody," said Brig. Gen. Dana Simmons, commander of Air Force Office of Special Investigations, headquartered at Andrews Air Force Base, Md.

"His capture is a culmination of a lot of work done by the Thai government, the local police in California, the State Department, the FBI, Immigrations and Customs Enforcement officials and some great OSI agents," General Simmons said.

Thai authorities were tipped off to Wonggoun's location after an Oct. 27 press conference released age-progression images and advertised a $25,000 reward for information that led to the capture of the fugitive.

"We're going to continue to work with the Thai government to see this process to final adjudication," General Simmons said. "We owe a tremendous amount of gratitude to the Royal Thai Police, who put a lot of effort into this investigation."

Air Force officials announce new PCS guidelines

RANDOLPH AIR FORCE BASE, Texas (AFPN) — In an effort to meet budget mandates, Air Force leaders have directed several assignment related initiatives to reduce the permanent change of station budget deficit.

The new guidelines include changes to assignment availability Code 50 maximum stabilized tours, the standard time on station for certain members transferring between stateside bases and officers departing for professional military education, overseas assignment curtailments, funded join-spouse assignments, as well as the officer time-in-area policy.

Members serving in a Code 50 designated stabilized tour will have their tour automatically extended 12 months beyond the current expiration date. The extension is in addition to any voluntary extension the member may have already entered. Career enlisted aviators and rated officers in flying positions are exempt.

Members with a projected PCS based on the previous Code 50 rules may apply for cancellation.

Enlisted members and officers in the support, judge advocate, chaplain and medical career fields as well as most rated staff positions will be subject to a 48-month TOS minimum before being considered for a PCS between stateside bases unless mission requirements dictate otherwise.

Officers selected for PME must have 24 months TOS prior to departure. Exceptions to this policy must be thoroughly justified and waivers must be requested by a general officer, colonel wing commander or their equivalents.

Members serving in overseas assignments will serve their full tour length. Waivers will only be granted for mission requirements and must be requested by a general officer, colonel wing commander or their equivalents. However, there are exemptions to this requirement such as officers rotating to and from commander's billets and humanitarian reassignments.

Funded join-spouse assignments, except those from one overseas location to another, will require 24 months TOS. Members will be allowed to volunteer for permissive PCS if they have 12 months TOS and the members travel concurrently; however, PCS entitlements must be waived, and the member must agree to incur all PCS related costs.

The Washington, D.C. tour review and officer time in area policy for San Antonio and Colorado are suspended until further notice. This policy required review of all assignments resulting in a permanent change of station or assignment between bases in the same local area, or a return PCS to the same location or area within a two-year period.

Senior Airman Sharon Howley, an integrated avionics mechanic, works with the T-38 flight director system test set. At age 19, Airman Howley is the youngest of more than 9,100 graduates earning their degrees in the October class of the Community College of the Air Force. She is also one of the youngest Airmen to earn a degree in the CCAF's 32-year history. Airman Howley is assigned to the 412th Maintenance Squadron at Edwards Air Force Base, Calif. 19-year-old Airman earns CCAF degree in 9 months

By Mr. Carl Bergquist

Air University Public Affairs

MAXWELL AIR FORCE BASE, Ala. (AFPN) — At 19 years old, Senior Airman Sharon Hawley is the youngest of more than 9,100 graduates earning their degrees in October at the Community College of the Air Force here.

The integrated avionics mechanic, assigned to 412th Maintenance Squadron at Edwards Air Force Base, Calif., completed the prerequisites for her aviation technology degree in less than nine months.

"I began the course in March 2005 with credit for three classes from another school, took three classes at CCAF and CLEP'd three classes," Airman Hawley said. "That allowed me to complete the course requirements by December 2005."

She said she was not familiar with the College Level Examination Program until she went to CCAF and found it very handy because it allowed her to finish her degree quickly.

Dr. James Larkin, CCAF director of institutional effectiveness, said Airman Hawley was not only the youngest graduate in her class, but is also one of the youngest graduates in the history of the college's more than 290,000 students.

"It's heartwarming to see someone her age take advantage of the opportunity to get their degree from CCAF," he said. "The school's average active duty graduate has been in the Air Force for 10.6 years when they get their degree, and the oldest graduate was 59 years old."

Airman Hawley works in an F-16A Fighting Falcon "back shop" avionics test station where she tests parts from F-16s and maintains the station. She said she joined the Air Force because she wanted to do something different.

"I went to a recruiter and six days later, I was on my way to basic training," the Airman said. "My job is very interesting and new for me. I never thought I would be doing anything like this."

The Community College of the Air Force was established April 1, 1972. The school's vision is to be the foremost occupational education institution that prepares the world's best expeditionary-minded air, space and cyberspace enlisted leaders.

"CCAF was really helpful for me, and the people were very motivating," Airman Hawley said. "I was also able to earn my general education associates degree."

Students of CCAF complete about 1.6 million semester hours of course credit each year, and the school has a stake in the job knowledge and performance of every enlisted person in the Air Force. The average graduate is 33.5 years old, is a staff sergeant and majors in Aviation Technology Maintenance.

A two-year institution exclusively serving enlisted personnel, CCAF awards associate in applied science degrees after students successfully complete degree requirements. The Commission on Colleges of the Southern Association of Colleges and Schools accredits CCAF, through Air University, to award associates degrees.

New I.D. cards more secure than earlier versions

By Mr. Jim Garamone

American Forces Press Service

WASHINGTON (AFPN) — New identification cards now being issued to some Defense Department employees will help standardize federal work force identification and enhance security, a senior Department of Defense official said here today.

The new common access card is part of departmental transformation efforts that harness common business practices to make the organization more efficient, said David S.C. Chu, the undersecretary of Defense for personnel and readiness.

“A key element of this new card is it is a more secure document” than its predecessor, Chu said.

The new card, he said, accomplishes three main objectives: — It makes the identification process more efficient; — It helps prevent identity theft or fraud; and — It better protects personal information, thus enhancing individual privacy.

The department began issuing the new ID cards

Oct. 27. They will be provided to employees over the next three years as the old cards reach their expiration dates.

The new card looks similar to the old one, but it features several enhancements, said Mary Dixon, director of the Defense Manpower Data Center in Arlington, Va. For example, the new CAC contains two fingerprints and a digital photograph, she noted.

Additionally, “we’re going to check to make sure you’ve had your background checks before we issue the card,” Dixon said. “That is something we have not done in the past, but we will be doing this now.”

President Bush directed that a single ID card be developed that’s interoperable across all federal agencies, Chu said. The Defense Department, he noted, has had CACs for some years now.

“So, we’re using that foundation as our stepping stone to reach the president’s goal,” Chu said.

Using one common ID card throughout the federal government “builds trust across agencies, because there is then just one credential,” Chu said.

Warrior of the Week

A1C Amador Castillo

Deployed Unit: 407th Expeditionary Operations Support Squadron

Job Title at Ali: Air Traffic Control Journeyman
Home Unit and Base: 49th Operations Support Squadron/Holloman Air Force Base, N.M.

Why other Airmen think he's a warrior: A1C Castillo is an air traffic controller who excels in the performance of his duties. He was key to locating the impact of two rocket attacks on Ali Base. He immediately passed tower observed and pilot reported sightings within seconds of the first impact, which was vital to the timely notification of base personnel to take cover and don protective gear. During an in-flight emergency, he directed responding personnel in assisting a helicopter landing with hung guns and ensured a safe arrival without incident. He participated in Bedrock cleanup, tent construction, squadron sports, Airmen's Attic, and served as a Spanish tutor.

Why did you join the Air Force? To serve my country as part of an elite team and learn a marketable skill in the process.

What inspires you? Setting goals and reaching them. One of my short term goals is making SrA below-the-zone.

What is your most memorable Air Force experience? Everything I learned in Basic Training has been vital in my career and life experiences.

Hobbies: Mountain biking, working out, volunteering at my local church, and spending time with family and friends.

Family: Single
