‘Tis the season for service before self

By Col James Moulton

407th Air Expeditionary Group Commander

This week I wanted to come right out and thank everyone for their service and sacrifice during this holiday season. One of the Air Force’s core values is service before self, and there is no time of the year when this hits home (or “away from home” might be more accurate).

While separations from family and friends are always hard, the Christmas season can be even harder, since this is the time of year when so many of us make plans for visiting — or being visited by — loved ones. But I’d ask that you keep this in mind: the reason most Americans back home are able to enjoy this holiday season is because of the sacrifices you, and others in uniform just like you, are making on their behalf.

Throughout our nation’s history, most Americans have been free to enjoy and celebrate Christmas freely and peacefully because a select few were willing to temporarily set aside their own individual celebrations to serve the nation. This weekend, you are part of that selfless tradition. Be proud of your sacrifices, and take heart in knowing that your service matters. And I’d also ask you to remember our brothers and sisters in-arms who are, and will be, standing in harm’s way throughout this holiday season.

Take care, God bless, and Merry Christmas.

Our military mission — Gift of Freedom

By Lt Gen Gary North

9th Air Force/USCENTAF Commander

As the holiday season approaches, we look forward to spending time with family and friends throughout the world and enjoying the festivities of the season. Whether we celebrate Christmas, Hanukkah or Kwanzaa, this season is traditionally a time for togetherness and sharing with each other.

Due to our military mission, many of us are away from our families this year as we contribute to the greatest gift that military members continue to “give” to our nation – the military support to our highest calling to our American people, that of supporting and defending the Constitution of the United States...said another way, preserving the gift of freedom. Those military members who are deployed can take heart in knowing that our loved ones at home understand our sacrifices, and are proud and respectful of the calling that has you deployed during this period of time.

Additionally, your military is providing gifts to others throughout the world as we continue the fight against terrorism. United States military members are in the forefront in helping the people of Iraq and Afghanistan as they grow as sovereign nations. As we enjoy our holiday times, whether deployed or at home, we will continue to stand side-by-side with our Coalition partners in training Iraqi and Afghan forces to support, defend, and protect themselves and their families.

To all the families of those at home and abroad, I especially thank you for the sacrifices you continue to make each and every day. As we go about our busy schedules, please remember to take time in your celebrations this joyous season and reflect on all the gifts we share as people in a free country. It is this very reason that many of our service men and women are deployed around the world today, to support, protect, defend, and to provide those same very promises for freedom that formed our nation so many years ago.

Best wishes for a happy holiday season and a prosperous New Year.

There are ways to minimize the holiday blues

By Capt Gordon Swain

407th Expeditionary Services Squadron Commander

The holiday season is fast approaching, and for many of us here at Ali Base it is a time when we most sharply feel the pain of being away from loved ones. As many do this time of year, I cannot help but reflect upon Christmases past, and I recall that this will be my third time deployed overseas during the holidays. It has never been easy, but I have found that there are ways to minimize the "holiday blues."

One thing that has always sustained me is the support that I have received from home. Each and every one of you should realize that everyone at home is proud of you and the sacrifices that you have made. No doubt many of you have already received many e-mails, letters, cards, and care packages from friends and family eagerly awaiting your return. It is their warm wishes, as well as the support from patriotic Americans everywhere, that enable us to endure another holiday season away from home.

Another thing that I have come to realize is that while nothing can replace the role of friends and family during the holidays, I can appreciate the impact of Air Force Services and USO sponsored events. As a young Airman in the first Gulf War, I was lucky enough to see numerous USO special events while deployed. I was able to see venerable wartime comedian Bob Hope, baseball hall-of-famer Johnny Bench, and country music superstar Aaron Tippin. Of course more recently I was able to see the 2006 CMA Female Vocalist of the Year, Carrie Underwood, right here at Ali. Events like those go a long way to improve morale, especially at this time of the year. As Commander of the 407th Expeditionary Services Squadron, I hope that you can see us as your family away from home as we try to make this time apart from your loved ones as easy as possible. Fortunately, we have plenty of events scheduled over the next few weeks to celebrate the season.

Here is a quick preview of what the Services Squadron has in store for everyone this holiday season. To start off, there will be an Ecumenical service on Dec 24 from 7 to 8 p.m. at the Big Top. This service will include singing Christmas carols and candle-lighting. On Christmas Day, the Australian Army will be playing host as they provide a Top 40 band for musical entertainment at the Big Top. Then to bring in the New Year, Dec 31, we are having an Ali Rockin' Eve Party from 9 p.m. to 1 a.m. Music will be provided by one of Ali's own DJs, M2. There will be party favors and door prizes given out every half hour. I sincerely hope you are all able to come out and join in on the fun we have planned for you.

Military housing rates boosted 3.5 percent overall

By Gerry J. Gilmore

American Forces Press Service

WASHINGTON (AFPN) — Servicemembers will receive an average 3.5 percent boost in their basic allowance for housing compensation benefit in 2007, a Defense Department official said Dec. 18.

The planned BAH increase starting Jan. 1 works out to about $300 million more than what was paid in 2006, officials said.

“The continued improvement in housing allowances represents our commitment to the preservation of a compensation and benefit structure which will provide members with a suitable and secure standard of living that will sustain a trained, experienced and ready force in the future,” said Cynthia Smith, a DOD spokesperson.

Officials said military housing allowances are computed according to three key criteria: median current market rent; average utilities to include electricity, heat and water/sewer costs; and average renter’s insurance.

BAH rates also are based on dwelling type and number of bedrooms in a given area and then calculated for each pay grade, both with and without family members.

For servicemembers with family members, average increases in the BAH are approximately $44 per month. For example, a typical E-4 will receive about $34 more in BAH than in 2006, while an E-8 will receive about $42 more than this year.

The BAH rate system has built-in protections to ensure that an individual servicemember in a given location won’t see his or her BAH rate decrease.

Some areas’ housing costs have remained relatively stable, while others continue to rise. Most of the costliest housing in the United States with the highest BAH rates are clustered on or near the East and West coasts, and the state of Hawaii.

For more information about military pay and housing allowances, visit <http://www.dod.mil/militarypay/>.
