Marines, civilians assault Bellows

By Joint Public Affairs Office

The Marines of the 1st Marine Expeditionary Brigade and soldiers from Bravo Company, Royal Highland Regiment, assaulted Bellows Air Force Station by air and sea June 24.

Although Marines like to the hit the beach clandestinely, this assault June 24 was anything but secret. The Marines and British soldiers used the amphibious assault training portion of their annual exchange, Exercise Union Pacific, to show members of the Navy League and the local media how the Marines use the station.

Because of the downsizing of the military, and the recent round of base closures, a lot of scrutiny has been placed on the Air Force Station.

Since the station has very little personnel stationed there and it has a military recreation facility, many people have questioned how it is used and whether it is still needed by the government.

Through the demonstration, the Marines hoped to answer some questions and give the guests an accurate picture of how the Marines train at Bellows.

The guests witnessed a large amphibious and heliborne assault by the Marines and British Soldiers with their objective of securing the old runway at Bellows.

After the assault, the Marines displayed much of their equipment and the Marines from the Brigade Schools' Motor Vehicle Operators Course took the guests for a HMMWV ride they will not soon forget on the rough terrain course it uses to train new drivers.

As BGen. C.D. Kuhn Jr., commanding general, 1st MEB, explained to several guests, Marines are not just interested in the beach. The objective is to get off the beach and maneuver inland. Bellows is the only real place Marines can do that in Hawaii.

He added that because of the downsizing, getting funds to train elsewhere is becoming more difficult.

During the last exercise Marines held at the Pohakuloa Training Area on the Big Island, the brigade spent about $600,000 transporting Marines and equipment to the training area and back. Since PTA is at an elevation of about 7,000 feet, the Marines cannot get any amphibious training there.

The main goal of the demonstration was to show the guests and media what types of training the Marines do at Bellows.

Virtually every weekday there are Marines at Bellows training. The Marines can't use the station on weekends because the beach is open to the public.

President signs closure list

By Joint Public Affairs Office

President Bill Clinton accepted the recommendations of the Defense Base Closure and Realignment Commission (BRAC) Friday that would mean the closing of 130 military facilities.

There are 106 Navy and Marine Corps bases and activities which are among the 130 facilities closing and 22 Navy and Marine Corps activities scheduled for realignment.

For Hawaii bases, only the expected closure of Naval Air Station Barbers Point and the realignment of Marine Corps Air Station Kaneohe Bay made the list.

The realignment at MCAS Kaneohe Bay will likely involve some Marine aviation assets moving to the West Coast and some Navy and Coast Guard aviation assets from the closing NAS Barbers Point moving to Kaneohe Bay.

As a result of cuts in military personnel overall, the large list of base closings and realignments was generated.

"It is impossible to reduce the number of men and women in the Armed Forces without an appropriate reduction in bases," President Clinton said at a press conference announcing his decision.

With the president's decision, Congress now has, by law, 45 legislative days to reject the report by a joint resolution, otherwise the recommendations become law. President Clinton said he expects Congressional approval.

When the recommendations become law, the closures and realignments are required to be initiated in no later than two years and finished in six years after the recommendations become law.

To soften the economic blow to communities affected by the closings, President Clinton announced a five-point economic development and aid package for those communities. Each, under the plan, would receive an average of one million dollars in grants as well as government help in converting the facilities to civilian use.

"The total aid package will be about $5 billion over five years," the president said.

The five-point program, as outlined by the president:

- Help for communities to organize a structure to expedite conversion of bases and facilities to civilian use, including federal grants.

- A single government agency to call for all assistance programs.

- Help with environmental cleanup with the Department of Defense readily accepting financial responsibility.

- A fast-track program for quick transfer of base and facility property to the community, including the ability to transfer part of any property to the community, including the ability to transfer part of any property while environmental cleanup is still underway on the rest of the property.

- Immediate marshalling of government resources to help the communities.

- Secretary of Defense Les Aspin said the program would be put in place immediately.

According to the report to the president by the BRAC, the base closures and realignments would save taxpayers $3.8 billion between 1994-1999. One-time costs of the closings and realignments were estimated at $7.3 billion with annual savings of $2.3 billion afterwards.

Besides MCAS Kaneohe Bay, there are several other Marine Corps bases or activities on the closure or realignment list.

The major closure for the Corps was Marine Corps Air Station El Torro, Calif. Most of the Marine assets there will relocate to Naval Air Station Miramar, Calif.

As part of the DoD data center consolidation, the Marine Corps will also close its data processing centers at MCAS Cherry Point, N.C., MCAS El Torro, Calif., MCB Camp Lejeune, N.C. and Camp Pendleton, Calif.

Marine Corps Logistics Base Barstow, Calif., is also on the list for a minor realignment of some of its assets.

Some Navy/Marine Corps Reserve Centers also are scheduled to close. The centers at Fort Wayne, Ind., Lawrence, Maine and Abilene, Texas will all close.

In addition to the new closings, MCAS Tustin, Calif., which was on the last closure list, was directed to move its aviation assets to NAS Miramar vice MCAS Twentynine Palms as stated in the last round of closings.

Marine Corps to educate young Marines about marriage

Headquarters Marine Corps

Recent world events that have led to large troop deployments have produced concern about first term dependency and its impact on readiness. Viewed as a junior enlisted Marine problem, the major motivations for policy revision include the overall impact on readiness as well as concern for individual Marines.

In an effort to address the problem, direct action within the Marine Corps is focused on an "education" program. Such a program would rest on the premise that junior enlisted Marines should be convinced that it is in their own best interests to defer marriage. Recruiting married people for enlistment in the Marine Corps would be reduced.

In addition, specific advantages and disadvantages of marriage (economic/monetary concerns) would be concentrated on throughout a Marine's term.

"Much of the problem is that young enlistees don't realize they may spend half to two-thirds of their first enlistment deployed," said Maj. Ken Paul, of HQMC's manpower policy office. Couple this with the stress of a new marriage, perhaps a new child or one on the way, and the limited income of junior Marines, and it becomes the recipe for a wide variety of problems.

Paul said, the Corps' "rational man approach" to this is through education and awareness. Rumor circulated about commands denying first-termers permission to marry or making them ineligible for monetary benefits is unfounded. It was also believed that a policy change in first-term marriages was a knee-jerk reaction to budgetary constraints. "This too," Paul said, "is untrue." He added, "that while money matters are always a concern, it is secondary to readiness and quality of life. The Center for Naval Analysis is currently studying the cost relationship of first-term enlistee marriages and children in the government."

"Recruiters will provide the realities of Marine life for interested men and women initially," said Paul. More specifically, they will discourage those with serious matrimonial plans and plant the seed in others of the difficulties young Marines can face balancing deployments and a household.

In boot camp, the message will be hammered home with formal classes. Finally, the idea will be reinforced during annual troop information training.

If a young Marine still insists love is strong enough to survive the trials of life in the Corps, he will be required to see the Unit Commanding Officer. The visit will not be to ask the CO's permission, but rather to give the senior Marine another opportunity to express the realities of deployment and duty, and how they may affect a new marriage.

Should the Marine still decide to tie the knot, he will be enrolled in a formal marriage education program, along with his intended if possible. The course will further serve to enlighten the young couples and prepare them for what may lie ahead.

UDP vehicle storage moved

By Sgt. Lou Ramirez

The storage area where Marines are able to store their vehicles has been moved to Ford Island.

Recent break-ins into the previous storage area at Pearl City prompted the change of location.

According to GySgt. Iakopo Unaita, Brigade Maintenance Motor Transport chief, most of the damage was covered by the Marine's car insurance.

Unlike Marines with families, single Marines who are deploying are faced with the problem of finding a place to leave their belongings and are left to wonder if they will be properly kept.

One of the most valuable belongings many Marines must leave behind is their personal vehicle.

The storage area provides the Marines with a safe location to leave their vehicles while they are away.

Although the vehicles are under lock and key, the owners should realize that they can never be 100 percent sure that no harm will come to their vehicle. Insurance should be kept on their vehicles at all times.

An active insurance policy is required in order to have the vehicle stored by the Marine Corps, explains Unaita. This way if something was to occur the owner would already be protected.

"There is really no safe situation under which insurance should be allowed to lapse," said Mel Yoshinaga, director, Installation and Logistics.

Even if a car will not be driven for a long period, the car should not go uninsured.

"I once bought an old car. I didn't insure the vehicle because I figured that I wouldn't be driving it, since it was not in working condition," Yoshinaga said. "Once I did finish rebuilding the engine I called my insurance company. I was extremely surprised when I was told that I was going to have to pay double the insurance rate for three years."

"As it turns out," he continued, "I was told that a car should not be uninsured for more than 30 days after it is purchased."

According to an All State insurance agent, all cars must be insured regardless of whether or not it will be driven. An uninsured car for more than 30 days, can constitute a $1000 fine.

Although it may seem useless to have insurance on a car while deployed, not having insurance on a car can prove to be costly anyway it is looked at.

Marines train in Tahiti

Cpl. Rob Sanchez
Special to Hawaii Marine

While members of the 1st Battalion, 3rd Marines were home training with a detachment of Tahitian Marines, a detachment of 1/3 Marines travelled to Tahiti, as part of U.S.-French Marines Exchange '93, to train with the Tahitian Marines of Regiment d'Infanterie de Marine a Pacific Polynesie (RIMaP-P).

The Tahiti detachment completed a shortened version of the French Commando Course. Normally allotted three weeks, the U.S. Marines finished their training in just under a week and a half.

The course included a mountain training package, a nautical training package, and a three-day raid in a jungle environment.

The detachment was made up of 3rd Platoon, Alpha Company, a SMAW and M-60 Machine-gun team from Weapons Platoon, Alpha Co., a Dragon Weapons system team from Weapons Co., and a two-man STA team from H&S Co.

"The exchange was nice, it showed different techniques, how we can work together, train together, march together, and exchange different points of view," said Captain Laurent Menegoz, the Battalion Signals Officer of RIMaP-P assigned to the U.S. Marine detachment.

"We prepared a challenging schedule, one where we'd all be tired coming home. We all enjoyed doing things we'd never done before, and we forged a real good relationship."

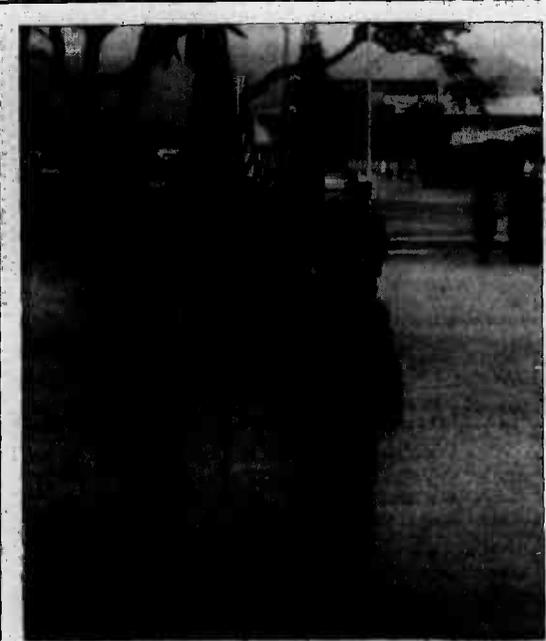

"We've been doing this for four years now, and every year we prepare better. Consequently, this year we were the most prepared," explained Major David Keuhn, the Operations Officer for 1/3, who has travelled to Tahiti for each of the U.S.-French Marine exchanges. "We did better on the swimming side, and through the tactical exercises we performed well."

"We saw how each other's military units train, and learned a few things on how to make our training better," said LCpl Paul Roberts. "I also believe they learned a few things on how to make their training better."

The training package at the Mountain Training Center offered the Marines many challenges, including a high-wire obstacle course, learning the French method of rappelling, and river crossing techniques.

The Marines' teamwork was tested in a timed Confidence/Team

Water safety pleas seem to have effect

By Sgt. Lou Ramirez
Staff Writer

This weekend served as proof that water safety awareness does pay off. Although the number of patrons using the stations beach facilities was large, the number of water related accidents was zero. "It seems like people were behaving and our water safety awareness is paying off," said Peter Rudisill, Morale Welfare and Recreation (MWR), supervisor outdoor recreation.

An extensive water safety program is offered by MWR here. This program offers classes from swimming for beginners to diving certification. Water safety briefs are also offered for anybody who requests them.

"We teach everybody the three basic guidelines; swim with a lifeguard on duty, find out about beach conditions, and never swim alone," Rudisill said. "The best way to be safe is to get educated."

A PADI diving course is offered by MWR for those who wish to learn more about the undersea by diving.

"The course has very strict standards," Rudisill said. "The classes reiterate to its students the importance of finding out the water information before going in."

Finding out what the water is like in the area where one is swimming seems to be one of the key things not only for diving but also for swimming safely.

"Here on station we have a flag system which identifies conditions by the color of the flag," Rudisill said.

A yellow flag stands for swim with caution, a red and yellow flag tells patrons that they may swim with fins but should use extreme caution. A red flag means the beach is closed.

"By station order we must close the beach whenever we see a 10-foot wave but it also up to the lifeguards discretion," Rudisill explained.

In some instances a dangerous situation may not be solemnly attributed to surf. The beach may be closed due to the sighting of a jelly fish or a sighting of a shark.

Although the lifeguards are out there to watch for unsafe situations, more importantly swimmers should be looking out for their own safety.

There are several things people should keep in mind before going into the water.

"One important thing is not to mix alcohol with swimming," said Matt Colapinto, water safety manager. "And to stay aware of the surroundings."

"There are really no set rules, but it is just takes common sense," Colapinto said.

Toyota is first in quality ratings

Toyota Motor Corp. got top ratings for quality cars and trucks in the annual survey released by the marketing information firm J.D. Power & Associates.

The Lexus LS 400 and the SC 300-400, built by Toyota, finished one-two in a measure of the fewest problems per 100 vehicles. The Infiniti J30 and Q45 finished third and fourth, respectively. Infiniti is Nissan Motor Corp.'s luxury division. All Infiniti and Lexus cars are imported from Japan. The Camry finished fifth in initial quality - the highest of any car assembled in North America.

In an assessment of light trucks, Toyota won five of six categories. There was no maker above the industry average in the best full-size van category.

The statistics are based on questionnaires answered by more than 45,000 consumers.

Planning, the key to moving from base housing

By Michelle Midgette and Mary Beth Thompson
OCHHO

Editor's note: This part two of three in a series of three that the Oahu Consolidated Family Housing Office has compiled about the office's special projects. This series offers military families possible solutions to the many questions about base housing in Hawaii.

Clearing Quarters
As peak moving season approaches, many residents of military family housing will begin packing away their moomuks and aloha shirts in preparation for a new tour of duty courtesy of Uncle Sam. If your family will be joining the spring migration from paradise, your Area Family Housing Office, located in Building 455, will provide you with step-by-step guidance for clearing your government quarters. However, it's up to you to set the wheels in motion for an orderly move. The following information will assist you in this process.

Notice of Intent to Vacate
When you receive reassignment orders, got to the Transportation Management Office to make arrangements for your personal travel and shipment of household goods. These arrangements should be made as early as possible. Then, go to the Area Housing Office to fill out a notice of intent to vacate. The notice should be given 45 to 60 days before your intended vacate date. While at the housing office, you will be interviewed and inspection dates will be scheduled. You will be given written instructions for clearing quarters and information on how to obtain loaner furniture for the period between when your furniture is shipped and you depart.

Pre-Termination Inspection
The first of your scheduled inspections will be the pre-termination inspection. An adult occupant of the quarters must be present for the inspection. You will need a copy of your check-in inventory condition form for this inspection. You should be prepared to give the inspector a list of problems to be repaired in and around the unit. The inspector will go through your home with you to identify maintenance work that needs to be performed by you and by the government. Cleaning requirements will be explained to you. The inspector will also advise you about any items that you have added to the quarters. It is important that you do not negotiate the transfer of such items to the next occupant until the housing inspector determines whether they may remain. If the inspector approves privately added items and the next occupant agrees to accept them, a written acceptance must be signed by the incoming occupant.

Loaner Furniture
If your household goods depart quarters before you do, you can get loaner furniture for use in the interim. Loaner furnishings include beds, tables, chairs, sofas, lamps and appliances. You can arrange for loaner furniture by taking a copy of your orders to the housing office, furnishings section, four working days or more in advance.

Occupant Final Inspection
Your final inspection will occur on the day you vacate your quarters. All personal items must be removed from quarters prior to final inspection. A housing inspector will again visit your quarters and an adult occupant needs to be present. You will turn in your keys after you pass this inspection. The inspector will check to see that you have performed the cleaning required and that the grounds have been groomed. The inspector will check that items which were to be removed have been, and that an agreement has been signed for any privately added items that remain. The inspector will also identify any damage to government property and start action to have you charged for that which is beyond fair wear and tear. If the final inspection is not passed, a re-inspection will be scheduled. If you still fail the minimum cleaning standards upon re-inspection, you will be charged the contractor's cost to do the minimum cleaning. If you fail the final inspection for other reasons, you will be required to correct the problems before clearance is granted.

Temporary Lodging Allowance
After you move out of your quarters you may be authorized Temporary Lodging Allowance if needed. The intent of government contract cleaning of quarters is to spare military families the ordeal of heavy cleaning at moving time and to save government funds by reducing TLA costs. As a result, TLA is no longer automatic and is normally limited to zero to two days depending on your schedule for hold baggage pickup, clearance inspection and departure flight. The housing office will give you a statement that government quarters are not available. You will need that statement to support your request for TLA.

Advice from the Housing Inspectors
When you've set the ball rolling early, you are on your way to an orderly move. Yet, you might like to know what housing inspectors, those veterans of thousands of moves, advise. Larry Glancy advises residents to schedule their pre-termination inspection well in advance to the final inspection. "This will allow for enough time to make necessary repairs, and to accomplish the tenant-responsible cleaning." During the pre-inspection, the inspector will tell you about any work for which you will be charged. Patrek Kapeli advises residents to carefully follow cleaning guidelines they are given by Family Housing.

"The guidelines basically tell you everything you need to do," Kapeli said, "and what the inspector checks for."

Eddie Kerr, said it's a good idea to get the yard done a couple of days before the inspection, and to get trash, including bulk trash, taken care of ahead of time. "These things are hard to do at the last minute and can hold you up if not done," Kerr said. "You also need to make sure vehicles are gone or the inspector cannot clear you. You cannot leave unwanted vehicles behind and say 'the MPs will take it away.' It's the occupant's responsibility to move the vehicles, not the MPs," Kerr said.

Joe Kirk advises occupants to control damages made by pets. "Don't allow your animal to claw holes through walls, doors and moldings," Kirk said. He goes on to say, "fleas also have to be removed from quarters. Make arrangements to have the pets removed early and the proper treatment provided prior to the final inspection."

from A-1 course, in which each team had to carry a simulated litter casualty and complete every obstacle successfully. The average time for the Tahitians was around 50 minutes, but second squad of the U.S. detachment completed the course in 45 minutes and 46 seconds.

At the Nautical Training Center, the Marines completed an underwater/surface obstacle course, in which strong ocean currents played a key role. If the Marines didn't hit the obstacle or dive down at just the right time, they would have to fight strong ocean currents and undertow to try again.

There was also a simulated drowning "dummy" which had to be rescued from the ocean floor. The dummy which weighed about the weight of a human being, and was placed at various depths throughout the course.

The Marines' small unit cohesion was tested in an all-out, 10-obstacle course. The course included swimming approximately eight feet under water through a four-foot tube, going over above-water planks and tubes, overturning a downed Zodiac, rescuing a drowning victim, and then paddling the Zodiac back to shore.

The third part of the Commando course was the three-day raid in the jungle, which included a gruelling 18-mile hike. It took two days just to reach the objective through the mountainous jungle terrain. The Marines' boots were constantly wet, with the hump route going through freshwater streams, mud bogs, and walking through the coral off the coastal waters themselves.

The objective, a mock enemy communications site, was destroyed on schedule, and the Marines were extracted via French LCU. Upon reaching the enemy's last position, the Marines showed the French and Tahitian Marines the U.S. Marine Corps' version of the squad assault, destroying the enemy and his will to fight.

Upon completion of the training, the Marines were presented with the "Commando Entrainment" pin, a much coveted decoration in the French Army, during a ceremony.

Besides the Commando training, two complete days were also spent familiarizing both the Tahitian and U.S. Marines with each other's weapons systems.

The Americans learned about the FAMAS, it's grenade launching component, and about the French Sniper rifle, while the Tahitians were trained on the M16A2, M203 grenade launcher, M249 SAW, the M60 machine-gun, the SMAW and DRAGON weapons systems, the M9 service pistol, and the M40A1 sniper rifle.

Both were impressed with each other's weapons, and each unit fired each other's weapons well. The U.S. Marines also performed another demonstration of the squad assault, and showed how each member of a Marine Rifle Squad has it's own individual job, and how the squad must work together to succeed.

In addition to the training, there was one obstacle the Marines had to surpass everyday—the language barrier. SgtMaj. Herve St. Pierre, battalion sergeant major for 1/3, who is originally of French/Canadian descent, helped the U.S. Marines by translating during the exercise.

But when he wasn't around, "We used a lot of hand signals," said LCpl Matt Allen.

The Marines also spent a day and a half on the island of Bora-Bora. They were originally scheduled to attend a ceremony to commemorate the 51st anniversary of that island as a major Naval refueling and landing station during World War II, but inclement weather changed their plans.

The Marines still had a good time as they competed with the Tahitians in volleyball and were able to attend a local party and beauty pageant. The Marines were also hosted by the Mayor of Bora-Bora at a feast held in their honor.

Perhaps LCpl Brad Hoeffs summed up the feelings of the detachment best by saying, "What can I say, it was an experience."

Preparing a child for school can be done in many different ways. One of the most commonly recommended methods is allowing the children to play with toys that refine the child's motor skills allowing them to use their imagination.

Preparing kids early for kindergarten helps them adjust to school

By Sgt. Lou Ramirez
Staff Writer

His first smile, his first word, his first step and now his first day in kindergarten. As with all firsts, the first day of school can be exciting, but at the same time, a fearful experience for the parents as well as the child.

In order to ease the child's mind, the parent may help the child by preparing him for this event and the many school days ahead.

According to the Hawaii Department of Education, parents can help children feel confident and happy about school by sharing information with them about the kindergarten program.

Parents should tell the child about the school schedule and its activities. Telling the child when and how he will get to school, how long he will be in school, and even things as simple as what to do to go to the bathroom, will help the child understand the concept of a classroom environment.

The Hawaii Department of Education recommends the parents find out who the child's teacher will be and have the child practice saying the teacher's name. Other situations should also be practiced such as how to make friends.

"Many children are not used to being around other children, therefore this will be one of the most difficult concepts the child will encounter," explains Ann Meador, preschool teacher and former elementary school teacher.

If possible, the child should be introduced to others who will be attending the same school and they should be allowed to play together, the Department of Education recommends.

Allowing the child to play with other children enhances the child's vocabulary, which is an important part of the child's ability to communicate. Being around other children will give the child the opportunity to use their communication skills.

If the child does not have a good vocabulary, the parent should practice different scenes with the child, explains Pat Krueger, preschool teacher and former elementary school teacher.

"It is important for a child to know how to enter a group and how to get a group going," she said. "For example the child should practice saying excuse me, may I play with this toy or may I play with you."

Although being around other children will help the child socially, many parents are still concerned with the academic aspect of school.

"Parents put such a premium on reading but there are other things that must be looked at first," Meador said.

Reading is developmental, therefore the child's horizons should be well expanded so that he will be able to visualize what he is reading, she explains.

"This can be accomplished by taking him to the zoo, the mountains, and other places of interest which will provide varied interest for him and enrich his vocabulary and broaden his knowledge," said Bob Morris, director of Meneshune Rainbow

Preschool and former elementary school principal.

"It is easier for a child to read a word which he has heard before and knows its meaning," Meador said.

Parents should also make it a habit to use color and size words when talking about everyday objects such as toys, foods or groceries. This will allow the child to recognize the meaning of different words.

Additionally, number words should be used frequently to acquaint the child with mathematics. "Please get me two napkins," or "You have three balls in your hand." Are examples of ways parents can use numbers in their vocabulary.

Although it is nice for a child to be prepared for the intellectual part of school, experts agree that it is ultimately more important for the child to be prepared socially and be independent.

"It is more beneficial for the child to be independent and be able to tackle small tasks that may be given to them," Meador said.

"The child should also be using thought self-help skills. This can be accomplished by doing less for the child. Children should be encouraged to get dressed on their own. I would much rather see a child whose clothes do not match, but know that they dressed themselves, than a child who is picture perfect but was dressed by the parent. Help your child by doing less for them."

Preparing a child for kindergarten may be something that may be done over a period of time, but one thing parents should do as soon as possible is register their children for kindergarten as soon as they are eligible.

In Hawaii all children entering the school system must have evidence of a negative TB test taken within a year of the school start date and they must also have a physical completed 90 days after school starts.

All military families who either live in housing or are on the housing list are eligible to use the Student Information/Placement Center (SIP) on station.

In order to reduce time spent registering the child, Clare Shinsato, SIP, district resource teacher, recommends parents bring all documents that may be needed such as original birth certificate, child's immunization records, proof of negative TB test and other pertinent information.

This information includes, name and social security of both parents, active duty member's unit and phone number, and physician's name and telephone number.

If the child has received special education, a current individualized education plan and evaluation data should be brought at time of registration.

"This will allow us to do immediate placement so that there is no interruption in the program," Shinsato said.

Preparing a child for that first day of school may seem like a long process but in reality most of the preparation has usually been accomplished simply by letting a child be a child.

Play School teaches kids about school

By Sgt. Lou Ramirez
Staff Writer

The Armed Services YMCA here provides children with the opportunity of experiencing a preschool environment without going to a formal preschool.

Although primary consideration is given to children whose parents cannot afford a regular preschool, it is open to everybody.

Nellie Tillmon, Playschool teacher, explains that it is important for children to learn socialization, and the ASYMCA wants to afford all children the opportunity before entering kindergarten.

Not only do the children learn how to be around each other but they also learn basic academics.

"The children learn their shapes, colors, letters and numbers through play," Tillmon said. "We also practice different skills to work on their fine motor skills."

One thing that may be helpful, not only for the child, but also for parents while the children are at home, is the experience the children get in following rules, procedures and self discipline.

The children also learn how important they are, therefore, creating a positive attitude.

"The children learn better if they feel good about themselves," Tillmon said.

Because this may be the first experience the children have in any type of school atmosphere, many parents like to watch their children in this type of environment.

"We keep the Playschool open for parents to come at any time. They can come and watch or even participate in what the children are doing," Tillmon said.

Many parents are very impressed with what the school has done for their children.

In fact, so many parents are so pleased with the Playschool, that they enroll their children for consecutive classes.

"Although it is possible to sign up for subsequent classes, preference is given to those children who had never attended," said Liz Aulsebrook, ASYMCA Outreach director.

Many parents have also been requesting that the course be longer.

"Beginning with our next class, we will be expanding to 10 weeks vice the current seven," Tillmon explained.

The Playschool provides a 3-4 program and a 4-5 program.

The 3-4 program accepts children who are 3 years and 3 months old to four-year-olds who are not going to attend kindergarten the following year.

The 4-5 program is focused on children who will be attending kindergarten the following year.

Each program meets from 9-11 a.m. twice a week.

Parents can enroll their children at the ASYMCA. Cost of the program is $40.00. For more information call 254-4719.

Children at the playschool learn many different skills through fun and games. A simple toy such as these blocks helps them to be creative while at the same time teaches them to share.

PMO "cuffs" BSSG Supply

By Cpl. Aaron Martin
Sports Editor

The Provost Marshal's Office took on BSSG Supply in intramural softball action here July 2 with the PMO winning 15-5.

The game had PMO getting down and dirty playing with high energy and determination to finish with a victory and remain undefeated in the league.

PMO jumped out to an early lead exploding with four runs in the first inning. BSSG Supply could not respond during their offensive opportunity and the score remained 4-0 as the second inning began.

The PMO confidence level was temporarily diminished after they could only score one run in the top of the second. BSSG Supply seized the opportunity to close the gap by capitalizing on the errors made by PMO and scored three runs to bring the score to 5-3.

Realizing the game was far from over, the members of PMO huddled for a motivation check shouting "Hit, Run, Score!" Being revitalized the PMO jumped out to a 8-3 lead after scoring on well placed hits into the outfield.

"The Marines in PMO work hard all day, so when they come out here they play hard," said Randy Price, coach of PMO. "We come out and give 110 percent."

The attitude of the coach reflected in the energy level of the players. Sliding and stretching for the extra bases were key factors in the scoring drives of the PMO.

BSSG Supply struggled to stay in the game and scored their last two runs in the bottom of the third but could no longer stay with the strong momentum of PMO.

as the players seized every opportunity to score and had a 12-5 lead going in to the fifth inning.

The top of the fifth was an opportunity to broaden the gap with runners on base. One of the runners, George Meyer, tried to score on a close play at home. Meyer was thrown out and was also ejected from the game for failing to slide at home plate.

In the top of the sixth PMO had two runners on base when Brian Woods hit a long ball to left field. He attempted to circle the bases, but was nailed at home plate on a solid defensive play by BSSG Supply.

The game was called on the 10-run rule in the sixth inning with PMO taking the victory 15-5.

"This is the first year we have had our own team, normally we have played for H&HS, so this is really motivating for us," Price said.

Racing the Hawaiian way

By Cpl. Aaron Martin
Sports Editor

Thousands of beach goers crowded Waikiki Beach to see the 51st Annual Walter J. MacFarlane Memorial Canoe Regatta July 4.

One of the competitors of the annual outrigger canoe race was Napu Thompson, director of the Joint Safety Center. Thompson, who was been paddling since she was 12-years-old, is a member of Hui Nalu Canoe Club. Hui Nalu narrowly edged out Outrigger Canoe Club for the overall title in the regatta.

The competition had 14 teams from around the island racing at distances of a quarter-mile, half-mile, mile, mile and a half and two miles. The competitors range from ages 10 to 65 years-old.

Outrigger canoeing is one of the oldest means of transportation for the people of the Pacific. Historians say that the Hawaiian Islands were populated by Polynesians who came to Hawaii via canoe. Today traveling the old way is considered a sport but it's also a vital part of the Hawaiian heritage.

"Outrigger canoeing truly reflects an important part of the Hawaiian heritage, it is a vital part of the history of the islands," Thompson said.

The canoes, which measure approximately 45 feet in length, are made of Koa wood or fiberglass. For the MacFarlane Regatta the boats were made of fiberglass. The competition, which is the only one held at Waikiki Beach, and is also the oldest annual canoe race, uses fiberglass because of the low depths of the water and the coral near the beach shore. Koa is an expensive wood and the teams did not want to damage a Koa canoe on the reef.

"The Koa wood is very expensive and none of the teams could afford to damage the canoes in the water," Thompson explained. "Just the wood for the canoe costs between $30-40,000. The wood is too precious to risk damage in this race."

The canoe holds six people including a steersman who guides the boat. A experienced steersman can utilize the waves to give the paddlers a brief break from the continuous paddling. The teams must be synchronized in the paddling to make the most of the energy expended.

Training for the competitors requires cross-training in addition to time in the boat.

"Everyday we must do some type of physical training such as running, bike riding or swimming in addition to more than an hour of boat time three days a week," Thompson said. "Training is vital because the competition is a real energy burner."

Thompson's team, which competed in the women's sophomore division, pushed hard during their one-mile race and came in second behind the Outrigger team.

"We had a good run and everything went good for us," said the Hawaii native. "That run was definitely an energy burner."

So far this season Hui Nalu has won all five of the regattas, which are overseen by the Oahu Hawaiian Canoe Racing Association, and appear to be the favorite for the remainder of the competitive season.

Thompson will continue competing for the remainder of the season which will end in late August or early September. Thompson is interested in sharing her skills at outrigger canoeing with Marines after the season is completed.

"If anyone is seriously interested in learning this sport, I would enjoy coaching them. I would like to share a part of Hawaii with them," Thompson said.

New Blood wins with "tiny" crowd

By Cpl. Aaron Martin
Sports Editor

The Players squared off against the New Blood in the Women's Intramural Volleyball playoff game at the Main Gym July 1 with New Blood winning the match 15-10 and 15-9 amidst the cry of tiny fans sitting on the sidelines.

The two teams approached the match with enthusiasm and determination, along with several little fans—most under the age of 18-months.

The crowd consisted of many little ones at the game to cheer their mummies on to victory. The mass of baby carriages behind both teams' bench was proof that a baby boom is in existence at K-Bay.

"We help each other with the newborns or little ones while their moms are on the court," said Dorsey Dubbs, New Blood player and mother. "If one of the moms is on the court someone on the sidelines makes sure the babies stay happy."

New Blood children went home with a happy mom after they defeated the Players in two close games.

The first game had the Players taking a 7-6 lead for the only time during the evening. New Blood brought strong play from serves and solid defensive blocks to obtain a 10-7 lead only to have the Players rally to a 10-10 tie. Unfortunately for the Players, that was all they would score during the game and were defeated 15-10.

New Blood took a quick lead in the second game of 7-4 and never looked back rolling to a 15-9 victory and the match eliminating the Players from the playoffs.

The games do not go without distractions, particularly with so many newborns in the Gym.

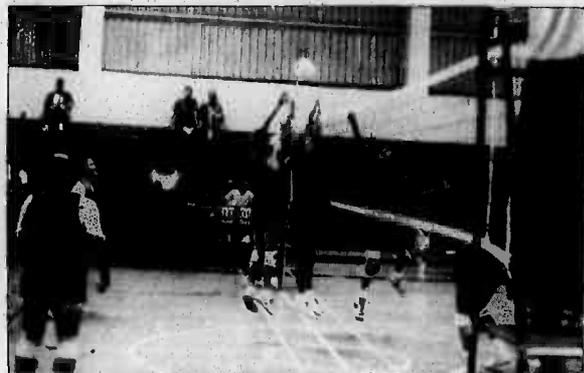

"Sometimes it is hard to concentrate on the game with a little one on the sideline; it's distracting and difficult at times," explained Jennifer Voepel, mom and member of New Blood.

There were also at least two players participating in the game which are expecting babies in the future.

"I enjoy playing volleyball but I want to be very careful so I'm cheering them on from the sideline," said Melissa Hastings, New Blood player and expectant mother.

To the little ones the score didn't matter. The important thing was that after the game someone came over and held them close like all mothers do and that is what really matters.

From the cheap seats: A sports commentary

□ Two more for Field of Dreams team

By Cpl. Aaron Martin
Sports Editor

A few years back the movie "Field of Dreams" captured the attention and the hearts of millions of sports fans. The story, in short, was about Ray Kinsella who built a baseball diamond in the middle of his Iowa farm. He built it because he heard a voice that said, "If you build it he will come." Soon several baseball legends from the past appeared out of his corn field to play ball.

I have sat and imagined what it would be like to see in person some of the men who have made my favorite sport great. If I ever had a vision to build a ball park, I know two players who were just added to my list of the dream team — Roy "Campy" Campanella and Don "Big D" Drysdale.

The two Dodger greats, one played in Brooklyn the other in Los Angeles, died less than a week apart. Campanella died June 26 of a heart attack in his Woodland Hills, Calif. home. Drysdale also died of heart attack in a hotel room in Montreal July 3.

Both men were legends in the sport and never distanced themselves from the sport after ending their careers. The personalities of the two were miles apart, but their talent was close.

Campanella would be on my team for several reasons. For those of us who never saw him play in person, he was unmatched as the finest catcher of all time. Johnny Bench, Carlton Fisk and Thurmond Munson could never match Campy's skills.

Some of the highlights of Campy's career included being the National League Most Valuable Player 1951, 1953 and 1955. He set major league records for 41-home runs and 142-runs batted in (RBIs) by a catcher in 1953.

He caught three no-hitters in his career and was one of eight Dodgers to have their number (39) retired.

But more than all those things Campy had a desire to make the most of every day. Known for his happy-go-lucky attitude and lively personality, he was able to make the most of a difficult battle of desegregation in the major leagues.

Campy was the second black man to enter the majors behind Jackie Robinson; and later followed Robinson into baseball's Hall of Fame in 1969. Campy's 10-year career ended after the 1958 season when his car overturned in an accident leaving him a quadriplegic for the remainder of his life.

Campy's skill and his charisma would bring light to any room he entered. He would be the man behind the plate for my dream team.

Drysdale was just the opposite of Campanella as far as personalities were concerned. Drysdale was known as a fierce competitor and was considered to be standoffish. Despite the angry sneer, which he was known for, Big D's skills on the pitcher's mound were phenomenal.

Drysdale's career included playing in five different World Series, of which, he was on winning teams in 1959, 1963 and 1965. He was selected for 10 All-Star games and won the Cy Young Award, Co-MVP and was the National League pitcher of the year in 1962.

He was perhaps best known for the major league record of 58 scoreless innings in 1968. His record held until 1988 when Dodger Orel Hershiser went 59 scoreless innings. Big D like Campy is one of eight Dodgers to have their uniform number (53) retired.

When Big D was on the mound, his 6'6" stature displayed what was behind the man - force and control. Drysdale was not afraid to throw at the batter as his National League record of 154 hit batsmen showed. When players like Willie Mays, Hank Aaron, Ernie Banks and Roberto Clemente came to the plate, they always knew they might be bailing out of the box if Drysdale was in a bad mood.

After retiring, Drysdale came back to the Dodgers in 1988 to work as a broadcaster. When Drysdale failed to show up for the game at Olympics Stadium July 3 co-workers and team members knew something was wrong. Moments later he was found dead in his hotel room.

Drysdale, who had said good-bye to Campy a week before, now joined him in the place where players like Gehrig, Ruth, Cobb, and Jackson share the good times - at the place where baseball is baseball and not a money sport.

If the day comes when I build my field of dreams in the pineapple fields of Oahu or the oil fields of Texas, I trust that the truly great men will come to my ball field and if they do, I will see Roy and Don making up the pitcher-catcher combination which could only be matched by few.

But for now the prayers and love goes out to the friends, fans and families of the these two Dodger greats who have moved to a new team. Undoubtedly it is a place where they can play ball with some of their old teammates.

Skateboarders will be able to use the new skateboard park for a short while. The park is being repaired and improvements are being made.

Skate Park closes for repairs, upgrades

By Joint Public Affairs Office

The station Skate Park has closed for repairs and upgrades after one month of operations.

The changes are being made as a result of feedback from users and lessons learned since the park opened.

"It's unknown at this time when it will reopen," explained Peter Rudisill, recreation supervisor.

Morale, Welfare and Recreation. "Watch for an announcement in the Hawaii Marine."

In addition to the repairs to the facility, MWR is looking for other ways to make the park better.

The park, which opened June 10, drew a large crowd to witness the grand opening of the much anticipated park. Approximately 30 kids were at the ceremony, but interest in the park has apparently waned.

Rudisill explained that other than the first two days the park was open, use of the Skate Park has been minimal. Since MWR must pay a person to monitor the park, use of the park has not been at the level that would justify the operation of a Skate Park.

If anyone has suggestions for the Skate Park, please contact Rudisill at 254-1651.
