2/3 Change of Command

LtCol. Gerold J. Flotte will relinquish command of 2nd Battalion, 3d Marines to LtCol. John R. Bates at 10 a.m. Friday during a change of command ceremony at Dewey Square. Flotte will become the executive officer for 3d Marine Regiment. The public is invited to attend.

Recruiter Screening Team here Monday

The Recruiter Screening and Naval Postgraduate School briefs will be held at the Pacific Hideaway instead of the Bachelor Officers' Quarters conference room. The Recruiter Screening will take place Monday at 8 a.m., while the NPS brief will be Tuesday at 1 p.m. For more information contact GySgt. Jeffries at 257-1251.

Hosts sought for cultural exchange

Hosts for a weekend homestay from Aug. 23 to 27 for Japanese university students are being sought by the Hawaii International Hospitality Center. Volunteers are being asked to provide room and board for males and females aged 18 to 20 from Hokuriku University who speak English and are completing a four-week English Language Training program in Hawaii. Hosts will have the opportunity to serve as citizen diplomats and experience cross-cultural learning at home. For additional information, call Barbara Bancel at 521-3554.

Hawaii Marines deploy to Korea

MarForPac Public Affairs

Marine Forces Pacific, Camp H.M. Smith, Hawaii — More than 240 Hawaii-based Marines and Sailors have deployed to the Korean peninsula to participate in Exercise Ulchi Focus Lens '96, which will be conducted from mid-August until early September.

UFL is used to exercise and improve plans for the defense of the Republic of Korea and will be conducted at various sites throughout the country. The Marines and Sailors are from MarForPac here.

For the Marine Corps, this is an especially important exercise because it provides the only opportunity each year to fully form and train the Combined Marine Forces Command staffs. CMFC is a unique United Nations command component established in 1992 that would play a critical role in winning a war in Korea if deterrence fails. In the event of hostilities, CMFC would consist of over 80,000 MarForPac Marines and Sailors, more than 600 MarForPac aircraft and the entire ROK Marine Corps.

BAC addresses issues

Sgt. William Poff
Staff writer

The Base Action Committee addressed new issues at the July 30 meeting.

Even a discussion on feral cats was on this month's agenda.

"The feral cat issue was addressed with possible alternatives for trapping them," said LtCol. Glenn C. Bixler, Base Inspector. "One Marine inquired about the excessive cost of food offered by the MWR food service truck, the Marine at the K-Bay rifle range also stated the box lunches provided by the chowhall were insufficient in quantity. These issues are under review by MWR and the Food Services Officer.

"Also brought forward was the complaint by several people of the difficulty in making telephonic contact with the Legal Services Center," Bixler added. "A suggestion was made to increase the number of phone lines. The Deputy Staff Judge Advocate will be contacted on this matter for resolution."

The Messhall was also the subject of matters concerning parking for the Marine patrons closer to the facility and the possibility of take out food from the main line. This would give some variety over the fast foods served in the current take out line.

Also in the meeting were concerns expressed that the proposed super playground would not provide activities for older children.

"Questions were asked if the MCX could include a youth center," said Bixler. "An issue with the teenagers here is the programs provided by the teen center and if they were giving input into the programs they wanted."

Each subject brought forth is logged down into the "minutes," a summary of the issues discussed.

"All issues which are logged down into the minutes gets tasked out to a specialist in that area of expertise," said Bixler. "Once an issue is tasked out, that individual handling the problem will research the matter and determine any merit or possible ramifications a change would make."

"With a little compromise most issues are resolved to the satisfaction of all concerned," added Bixler.

Second Marine contracts near-fatal disease

LCpl. Steven Williams
Staff writer

Leptospirosis, a disease caused by a fresh water organism found in many of Hawaii's streams and ponds, hospitalized another Marine Aug. 8, after it spent two weeks incubating in his body and subsequently causing lung and kidney damage.

The Marine, from Combat Service Support Group 3, is the second to contract the illness within a six-week time period, according to Navy Capt. Robert D. Knudson, surgeon, III Marine Expeditionary Force. With two near-death situations involving leptospirosis, base officials are working around the clock to keep Marines out of fresh water pools, streams and ponds.

"Leptospirosis is an organism that resides in the kidneys of rodents and some other mammals," said Knudson. "In a rodent or other mammal, the organism is in a carrier state, which means the animal is not affected with disease or illness. The organism passes from the animal through urine, then lives in fresh water, foods and soil."

When humans come into contact with the organism, Knudson said it can invade mucous membranes found in the nose, mouth or eyes. It can also enter through abrasions in the skin. Normally, when contracted, it is a mild illness confused with the flu or muscle aches. However, it can be fatal.

Leptospirosis has been a near-fatal experience the Marine who's name is being withheld for privacy reasons, according to Navy Lt. George Cole, CSSG-3 surgeon. After he went swimming with friends at Manawili Falls during the last weekend of July, he reported to sick call Aug. 5.

He was diagnosed with "mild, flu-like symptoms" and sent back to work, according to Knudson. However, he returned Aug. 8 feeling even worse. After a couple of tests at the Branch Medical Clinic, Knudson said the young Marine was delivered by ambulance to the Medical Intensive Care Unit at Tripler Army Medical Center.

"Within a short period of time, his condition deteriorated rapidly," said Knudson.

Upon arrival at MICU, Knudson said the Marine was diagnosed with Adult Respiratory Distress Syndrome and kidney failure.

"ARDS is similar to shock lung syndrome," said Knudson. "A similar thing is found in drowning victims."

Because of the bleeding in the Marine's lungs and his kidney failure, Knudson said all signs pointed to leptospirosis.

"He had an onset of symptoms, going from moderately ill to very seriously ill in a very brief period of time," said Knudson. "Had nothing been done, he probably would have died within two to six hours."

Because he merely went for a swim in the wrong water, the young Marine lies in a hospital bed with tubes running from almost every orifice of his body, according to Knudson.

Another Marine is on convalescent leave after his encounter with the disease six weeks ago, Knudson said. Following his infection, which he contracted at Sacred Falls, information and warnings were distributed to the base community. However, Marines and servicemembers throughout Oahu continue to slip through the cracks into the hands of life-threatening leptospirosis.

"Tripler reports five to seven cases like this each year," said Knudson. "A five-year Hawaii Department of Health study from 1990 to 1994 identified 177 reported cases statewide, including five deaths."

Knudson said the Marine is improving, but is still listed in critical condition. He will probably fully recover from the illness, but Knudson said he and hundreds of other Marines and Sailors who enjoy Hawaii's swimming recreation areas should exercise caution and learn a life-saving lesson from his near-death situation.

Benefits made available for those under prior education program

LCpl. Michael Wiener
Staff writer

Active-duty service members with money still in their Veterans Educational Assistance Program account could soon receive the same benefits of service members who have the Montgomery G.I. Bill.

If Congress moves ahead with a House Republican budget proposal, a small amount of funds in their personal educational fund would guarantee eligibility for the conversion to the G.I. Bill.

"Compared to the G.I. Bill, the VEAP is a slap in the face," said Loretta Cornett, director of Joint Education Center MCB Hawaii. "With VEAP, an individual could have up to $ 2,700 in their account. The government would give two dollars to every dollar that the individual used toward their education. But with the G.I. Bill, you can receive up to $15,000."

People who entered the services between Jan. 1, 1977 and July 1, 1985 were given the opportunity to enroll in VEAP. But only about 120,000 of the more than 386,000 active-duty service members who joined during the time signed up

13th MEU aims Avenger into future

AL QATRANAH, Jordan — Marines are using the Avenger weapons system to change the role and effectiveness of Low Altitude Air Defense sections. Once relegated to guarding airfields and headquarters positions, this futuristic air defense weapons system has allowed LAAD Marines to charge to the front lines.

Leading the charge is the LAAD section attached to Marine Medium Helicopter Squadron 163 (Reinforced), 13 Marine Expeditionary Unit (Special Operations Capable), which is currently deployed in the Middle East. This section, from 3d LAAD Battalion, Marine Aircraft Group 38, is the first to deploy with a complete section of five Avengers.

From predeployment training to the recent exercise Infinite Moonlight '96 in the Jordanian desert, LAAD has directly supported maneuver elements spearheading an attack.

"The night movements, high operational tempo and true involvement, especially in Light Armored Reconnaissance's schemes of maneuver was a first-ever," said SSgt. Patrick S. Studebaker, LAAD section leader. "Quite truthfully, the non-stop tempo of operations we participated in with C Company, 1st LAR was the most realistic training I've seen since 3d LAAD's involvement in Operation Desert Storm."

Operating a million-dollar Avenger would make science fiction movie fans feel like they should be gunning down enemy spaceships from an outpost in the far reaches of the galaxy.

The Avenger is mounted on a Humvee. The gunner's seat is sandwiched between two pods. Each pod can hold four Stinger missiles and an M3P .50-caliber machine gun is mounted on the turret below the right pod.

The Avenger weapons system's missiles and gun can be fired effectively while the vehicle is going as fast as 30 mph. A voice-activated microphone lets the gunner communicate with the driver and the unit he is supporting.

When a gunner twists and tilts the H-shaped controller, like the yoke of a small airplane, to track a target, the turret rotates and the pods and gun elevate and lower. The Forward Looking Infrared monitor lights up with a pattern of squares and circles that guide the gunner to the target.

"Identifying targets is an important skill to these Marines. Since individual teams deploy with different units, a corporal is often responsible for identifying an aircraft or weapon system and judge if it can be engaged according to the rules of engagement," said 1stLt. Adam Perrin, LAAD section officer-in-charge.

The Identification Friend or Foe system helps these Marines make their decision. The IFF works like a radio password. The IFF receiver on the Avenger picks up the signals put out by some weapons systems and most aircraft and determines whether the target is friendly.

Once locked on to an enemy target, the gunner squeezes the missile or gun trigger, and a missile screams from one of the pods or 20 half-inch thick rounds blaze from the M3P each second.

As the Avengers roared across Jordan's desert, the LAAD Marines got a chance to actually track and engage many different types of American and Jordanian aircraft. Stinger Captive Flight Trainers have the same seeker head as the actual missile, but no flight capabilities or explosives. The gunners gained valuable experience tracking targets and operating the weapons system, which improves their chances of success in combat, Studebaker said.

All LAAD team members are competent gunners and communicators, Perrin said. They can also interpret from maps, the likely routes and approaches of enemy aircraft.

Although the Avenger is designed to fend off air attacks, the M3P is also effective against ground targets, as the Marines proved by destroying targets 1,000 meters away during their .50-cal live-fire exercise.

"The .50-cal shoot was motivating. The training we've done here is the best training we've had so far," said Cpl. Juan Alvarado, Stinger gunner. "We got to work with a lot of new equipment and all sorts of units from the grunts to the air wingers."

During the exercise, the LAAD Marines became the first deployed section to use the Digital Tactical Defense Alert Radar, which detects targets up to 20 kilometers away. The information from the T-DAR can be projected on the inside of the Avenger turret's windscreen. The heads-up display gives the gunner the information without him having to look down at the control panel.

To extend the detection range and reaction time even further, the Avenger can be linked to a variety of Marine Corps and host nation radar systems.

An important part of the system is the Eye-Safe Laser Range Finder. The ESLRF in the Avenger gives the gunner a fast and accurate readout of the distance to the target for calling in air support and leads laser-guided ordnance to the target.

This high-tech gear is combat-durable, Studebaker said. If an Avenger gets hit, as long as one Stinger missile survives, the Marines can quickly retrieve a missile from the pods, slap a gripstock on it and fire from the shoulder. Marines can quickly open the side of the pods, pull out a missile and prepare to fire it.

The Stinger is a fire and forget missile that can home in on a target's silhouette or heat signature, making it effective for day or night air defense. (Sgt. Steve N. Ongley)

A Letter From the Editor

Never easy saying goodbye to the Corps

Aaron Martin
Managing Editor

Thank you is a word not often heard in the military. Having spent a tour in the Marine Corps before converting back to the civilian workforce, I look back on my days in bootcamp, and I don't recall ever hearing my drill instructor say "Thank you recruit Martin for all your hard work," and bootcamp had to have been one of the hardest jobs I have ever had.

Martin

I don't even recall, after going out into the fleet, hearing the words "thank you." It was always "good job" or "keep charging hard, devil dog" or this work is "good to go." I quickly learned these were indeed the military's way of saying thank you.

Once thrust back out into the civilian world I found myself forgetting to say "thanks" when people who supported my efforts did a good job. Instead it was those terms like this is "good to go" or some other military-related phrase.

Well, the time has come for me to say thanks to the many people of the Marine Corps, the Department of Defense and the community as a whole. During the past five years I have been a part of Hawaii Marine as a staff writer and for the last three as editor.

The most vital part of the paper's weekly production is not the writer or the editor but you, the reader. You are the source of information, support and the spice which adds the flavor to each week's publication.

I am proud to have served with the Marines, officers and civilians who are a part of the Consolidated Public Affairs Office. They are perhaps some of the hardest working people I have encountered and without them I know the newspaper would not be near the caliber publication it is today.

I would also like to say thanks to all the agencies who have supported the Hawaii Marine with information. Each and every one of you has made the task of putting the paper together a less difficult undertaking because of your support.

In the future I believe the Hawaii

Marine will continue its award-winning tradition and you will see perhaps some new and innovative advances. The newspaper will soon be produced with digital imagery which will make the environmental folks happy. These advances are just some of the transformations the paper has implemented over the past few years and I would like to thank everyone who was a part of them.

'I have had many experiences in my 30 years, but nothing can compare with my days in the Corps ... this band of brothers I will truly miss.'

As for me, it is time to say goodbye to all my fellow Marines and my civilian colleagues. Much like Marines who at the end of their tour of duty either move on or separate, outside business opportunities have now dictated I move on. However I would be remiss if I did not say thanks to everyone for their assistance.

The paper is now in the capable hands of a staff which I have worked closely with for what seems like a lifetime. I am confident they will endeavour to produce a fine publication each and every week.

Perhaps the hardest part is I am leaving something which has been such a vital part of my life for the past seven years — the United States Marine Corps.

I have had many experiences in my 30 plus years of life but nothing can compare with my days in the Corps. The places, training evolutions, educational opportunities, pride and teamwork is what makes this "band of brothers" a mystique unexplained except by fellow Marines. This I will truly miss.

Being a Marine is something which will continue with me for all the days of my life. I understand what vets like Richard Fiske and Gen. Louis Wilson, whom I have interviewed, mean when they say what the Corps means to them. I recall the Marine Corps' slogan several years ago which said "We never promised you a rose garden," but it certainly has created a lifetime of memories for me and many others.

So as I bid farewell to everyone I leave my relationship with the Corps knowing that leaders such as Gen. Charles C. Krulak, the commandant, are making the Corps a stronger, more technologically capable force in readiness. Goodbye, good luck and God bless each of you Marines, Sailors and civilians which have made my years here a pleasure. Semper Parati!

TIRES
Tire service begins with a visual inspection of your tires for abnormal tread wear or other damage. Check your tire pressures with a pencil-type gauge twice a month, including your spare tire. Invest in your own gauge to be sure you can check tires when they are cold.
Tread Wear Inspection: Visually inspect your tires for: 1. Underinflation 2. Overinflation 3. Improper alignment 4. Adequate tread depth. Tire Inflation: improper tire inflation affects steering, braking, tire wear, and is a major contributor to high fuel consumption. All tire manufacturers recommend maximum inflation pressures for their tires. These are listed on the sidewall of the tire. Pressures should be measured when the tires are cold. This means the tires should have been standing for at least three hours or driven less than one mile after standing for three hours.
If you need to add air to your tires while on the road, equalize the pressure in the tires on each axle. Otherwise, the uneven pressures will cause erratic steering. Tread Depth: All car tires made since August 1968 have tread wear indicators which appear as continuous bars across the entire tread. These bars are placed at even intervals in the tire tread, but are only visible when the tread has worn down to the last sixteenth of an inch. Replace the tire when these wear indicators are exposed in two or more adjacent grooves on the tire.

Roving machine shop provides mobility

LCpl. Steven Williams
Staff writer

Barreling through brush, steep ravines and some of Mother Nature's grungiest mud, Marine vehicles seek out the enemy in some of the worst environments. However, along with every other mode of transportation, they have one common enemy — breakdown.

Fortunately, the Marine Corps has a weapon to fight this enemy — the Shop Equipment General Purpose Repair Semi-trailer Mounted. Also known as B-1951, it is a mobile machine shop mounted on a trailer hauled by a 931 tractor trailer.

This 31,000-pound quicker-fixer-upper enlisted in the Marine Corps June 6, 1991. Valued at approximately $1.3 million, according to Sgt. Earl A. Johnson, machinist, Maintenance Company, Combat Service Support Group 3. He said B-1951 is filled with everything you need to deal breakdowns in the field.

"We help keep a high state of readiness to complete missions," said Johnson. "If anything breaks, we can make or fix the part in a timely manner."

Some handy tools built into the B-1951 include a lathe, drill press, grinder, air compressor, vise, valve grinder, honing machine, 50-ton press and even a heater for chilly nights in the field. Marines here mainly use the shop for welding or fabricating parts and making tools in the field.

When it's time for action in the field, the trailer is dropped off in a spot most convenient for the Marines. Two flaps which extend along both sides of the trailer are raised like awnings. A large tent is set up around the trailer and the shop is ready for business.

Sgt. Earl A. Johnson, left, and Cpl. Mike P. Crinigan, both from Combat Service Support Group 3, check equipment on a Mounted Shop Equipment General Purpose Repair Semi-trailer. The mobile machine shop acts as a roving repair point for equipment plagued by mechanical problems.

"If you can think it up, we can make it," said Cpl. Mike P. Crinigan, welder, Maintenance Co., CSSG-3. "The units just bring us a chunk of steel that is about the same size as the part they want and we make it. That saves them time instead of going through supply and reordering parts."

Not only does this mini-machine shop save Marines time and hassle, it saves money in expensive supply items. For example, Johnson said the shop saves approximately seven and a half hours of labor and $200 by extracting head bolts with a 30-minute on-scene job.

By cutting out bolts in a radio housing and welding it back together, Crinigan said he saved at least $1,000 in replacement costs. He said the machine shop literally saves the Marine Corps thousands of dollars each time it hits the field.

Common items machine shop Marines make on field ventures are brush guards for high mobility multipurpose wheeled vehicles. By reconstructing these guards, the shop saves the Corps approximately $100 per item, according to Johnson.

"The B-1951 is vital in improvising, adapting and overcoming situations," said Crinigan. "We don't keep track of how much we save, we just do our job. Most importantly, we get the gear up and going."

The Marines don't have to worry about bulky generators or bothersome cables to keep the machine shop running. It has its own 6.2 liter diesel engine, the same engine found in Humvees.

With a 55-gallon diesel tank, Johnson said the Marines don't have to worry about stopping very often for a fill-up. The engine can generate power about 10 hours before it needs another drink of fuel.

Hawaii Marines currently use B-1951 during training exercises at Pohakuloa Training Area and in static displays at Bellows Air Force Station, according to Johnson.

Serving with units throughout the Marine Corps, these mobile pit stops deploy worldwide. By providing fast service for essential gear in combat situations, Crinigan said B-1951 has proven itself a vital asset for Marines.

for the program.

Under the proposal, written by the House Veterans Affairs Committee, any service member with an active VEAP account could enroll in the Montgomery G.I. Bill by contributing $1,200. An active account is defined as an account with funds still available to the service member.

But service members who have withdrawn all of their funds can reactivate their VEAP account and be eligible for the conversion. "Any active-duty service member who had a VEAP account can convert, all they need is a $25 deposit into their account," Cornett said.

As with any bills that got to the House, there is no guarantee that the VEAP conversion bill will be passed. "This is the first indication that Congress is listening to us," Cornett continued. "Education officials have been distressed for so long about the differences in VEAP and the G.I. Bill."

In order to keep costs down, the House Veteran Affairs committee wants to limit the number of conversions to the G.I. Bill. Aides working on the conversion believe members with funds in their accounts participate in the program and are interested in receiving education after the service, and should be the only ones allowed to make the conversion.

"But most VEAP participants withdrew their money with the encouragement of educational counselors," Cornett said. According to VEAP policy, the money only had to be present before separating from the service, so many members emptied their accounts and invested elsewhere.

Some Congressional aides are afraid the large number of people who will want to convert will jeopardize the bill, according to an article in "This Week in Congress." Only $80 million has been set aside for the next six years to improve the VEAP. This amount is only sufficient for about 15,000 conversions. A raise in the cost-projection due to the large increase in re-opened VEAP accounts could make it difficult for the bill to pass.

The House committee is writing the conversion so only people with a VEAP account active on a yet-to-be-determined day will be eligible, making it more important for interested service members to make sure their account contains money.

"No one knows if or when the bill will be passed," said Cornett, "but I would hate to see anyone miss out on $15,000 in educational benefits." Anyone with a VEAP account should make sure that they are eligible, and they should "get out and do it now."

Bigger and better pancakes, made to order

LCpl. Steven Williams
The "Flapjack Supreme" is the reason PFC Michael Massey, Combat Support Co., 3d Marines, goes to the mess hall on weekends. He can pile on toppings as high as he likes at "Top's House of Pancakes."

LCpl. Steven Williams
Staff writer

Bigger and better pancakes made to order highlight new patron-pleasers introduced at Anderson Hall.

Along with normal chow items found during brunch periods 8 to 11 a.m. Saturdays and Sundays, Anderson Hall began flipping bigger and better pancakes July 6 for a new weekend line called "Top's House of Pancakes."

"People come to the mess hall to relax," said MSgt. David A. Smith, manager. "We try to operate in an atmosphere like you'd find in a nice restaurant out in town."

Not only do patrons enjoy a variety of fresh-from-the-griddle hot cake flavors like chocolate chip, blueberry and strawberry, they also have an even larger selection of tummy-tempting toppings to pour on top. Smith said the toppings bar will feature favorites like whipped cream, cherries, and maple syrup.

Best of all, the flapjacks are made to order. When the Pancake House was introduced over the holiday weekend, Smith said the Marines "ate it up."

"These are big pancakes," said Smith. "We aren't talking regular pancakes like the ones served Monday through Friday. These are the kind that fill up your plate."

While the jumbo griddlecakes were a hit on the breakfast brunch menu, a potato bar was introduced July 13 to the dinner menu.

Normally, the special spuds line was only open Monday through Friday during lunch and dinner. Now patrons can dress up their own taters from 3 to 5 p.m. on weekends too.

The final changes to the serving lines were self service stations at every line on Sundays. Where patrons are usually served by workers who spoon out serving sizes of their own discretion, the newly implemented process allows Marines to pile their own plate loads.

"Sometimes people want less rice or more potatoes," said Smith. "They can take what they feel they will be eating. If they want more, they can go back in line and get more. But, since you serve yourself, make sure you wash your hands before you come in."

If Marines want to eat on the run, the lines are also open for self-serve carry-out meals. Before, brown bags were only available on the fast food line.

"This is something we haven't been able to do because the paper products are really costly," said Smith. "We're going to try it and hopefully we'll get the command support to buy more products."

These ideas stemmed from quality of life board meetings. Although

LCpl. Steven Williams
During the Saturday and Sunday rush at Anderson Hall cooks must prepare plenty of pancakes and keep them coming.

many Marines don't feel boards or dining surveys have any effect on mess hall operations, Smith said "we do listen to these quality of life boards. If we can afford to do it and its feasible, we'll do it."

Anderson Hall is looking for more suggestions for improvement, according to Smith. He said the mess hall has patron surveys on every table for the patrons' and facilities' convenience.

"If they put their phone number on the survey, we will try to contact them," said Smith. "If there is feedback, we would like to hear it."

Meanwhile, Smith said Anderson Hall will keep its grills hot with ideas, offering its customers first-class service. The Pancake House and extended potato bar are just part of a continued effort to make dining in the mess hall as comfortable as possible for hungry Marines.

For questions or suggestions to improve Anderson Hall's patron service, contact Smith at 257-1621.

•A husband and wife were arrested after she threatened to stab him during an argument. The husband hit and pushed his wife several times, then allegedly, she grabbed the knife and threatened to stab him if he left the quarters. She declined medical attention.

•Military police conducted checks at a woman's quarters after she reported receiving three phone calls from an unidentified man threatening to rape her. She also reported receiving several threatening phone calls from a woman.

•A man was arrested after an anonymous caller reported the man and a woman were arguing at their quarters.

Further investigation revealed the argument was over the woman's sleepwalking and the man wanting a divorce.

•Two people were arrested for several violations of base pet policy after someone reported dogs barking at a quarters on Cochran Street. After MPs arrived at the scene, three witnesses stated the two people neglected their dogs by failing to feed, water and provide shelter for them. The witnesses also said the dogs ran unattended throughout the neighborhood, and further investigation revealed the dogs were not registered on base. The dogs were impounded for their protection.

•Military police arrested a man for speeding and driving on a suspended license. After stopping the man for speeding, a routine check revealed his driver's license was suspended in Ohio.

•The Military Police Department has a 24-hour recorded Community Action Line set up to assist with any questions or concerns you may have. Call today and take a bite out of crime, 257-6800.

Weak Swimmers school focuses on qualification

Sgt. William Paff
Staff writer

A Weak Swimmers school is now offered here to remediate those who are unable to qualify in the Marine Corps swim qualification test.

The school meets Marine Corps requirements by establishing a remedial program to qualify all Marines to at least the S-4 level.

"S-4 is part of the new swim qual which came out in 1995," said Sgt. Daniel L. Culbertson, chief instructor for the water survival section at Regimental Schools. "This new course will assist individuals to qualify without gear, which is what the new S-4 classification is."

The program is a personalized way to accomplish what is usually done at the unit level, according to Culbertson. Sometimes a Marine may "slip through the cracks" and not get the training skills necessary for his next qualification.

"We are the ones who usually do the swim qualification so our instruction deals specifically with what an individual needs to accomplish," said Culbertson. "Most of the instruction is on an individual basis because everyone has personal areas or problems that do not allow them to qualify."

"In the past we have had to remediate swimmers who've had an actual phobia of the water," added Culbertson. "They're started slowly and we gradually increase their confidence until they perform the tasks required for qualification."

The course is not designed as an upgrade program for swim qualification rating, but the possibility of such a program is being reviewed for implementation. This will help the in the goal of making all Marines Water Survival Qualified, said Culbertson.

The first weak swimmers program will begin Sept. 9, and run four days.

"Units will be getting quotas for the course in a letter of instruction," said Culbertson. "Hopefully units will be proactive and send their weakest swimmers needing help."

If quotas will not fulfill training requirements then the Water Survival Section will create a special program for that unit. "We have a lot of flexibility in setting up training for individual units," said Culbertson. "By coordinating five days training through Regimental Schools any unit can have its own weak swimmers program."

The best way to become a better swimmer is to get into the water and always ask experienced swimmers questions, Culbertson said.

For more information on the Weak Swimmers Program, call Culbertson at 257-3466.

My summer movies

Summer's always good for at least one or two action movies, a sugary love story and maybe an alien movie or two. Here's my take on this year's blockbusters:

In Depend's Day — Elderly aliens try to take control of a Depends undergarment factory. Angela Lansbury stars as a snarled, cranky retired Marine captain who, as the sergeant of arms of the local American Association of Retired Persons chapter, takes matters into her own hands. Rated G for Geriatric.

The Halfback of Notre Dame — A small halfback, played by the guy who played "Rudy" in the movie coincidentally titled "Rudy," is severely injured during a ruthless gang tackle by the hooligans known as the Miami Hurricanes. Against all odds, he continues to attempt playing football, aiming for a comeback at next year's Miami-Notre Dame game. Alas, the Irish coaching staff, horrified by the continued beatings at the hands of the Hurricanes, derail his hopes when they decline to play Miami again. The halfback goes schitzo, and that's when the fun begins. Rated NC-17 for no chance to score 17 points against Miami.

TERMINATE the LAST ACTION HERO with an ERASER — Starring Arnold Schwarzenegger as an aging action movie star who gets terminated as audiences tire of his accent which seems to grow thicker with each movie, his mono-syllabic scripts, and his weak hooks. However, the typical mindless Arnold formula — a few laughs, explosions, powerful weapons and a lot of blood, continues to work for meat-and-potatoes kind of guys, people who imagine it's their boss being blown to bits while Arnold butchers another line — "Hasta Escondido, baby." What I want to know is when is Arnold going to make a Mack Bolan movie? Rated R for retreat.

The Cable Company Guy — Stars Jim Carrey as a ticked-off Marine who's tired of his local cable company's shenanigans, like not offering really good channels like TNN and BET, and the company's annoying outages, not to mention their high rates for poor service. So, Carrey gets a night job at the company and rigs the works so every home on base gets all the channels free. Allrighty, then. Rated W for wishing the cable company would actually do something.

The Rock — Stars me as a Harvard-educated prisoner — oops, I mean professor — who, as it turns out, wants to join the Marine Corps. Not wanting to intimidate anyone with my genius-level IQ, I intentionally score 14 on the ASVAB test ("No problem," the recruiter said. "We'll just make you Public Affairs."). The movie becomes a barrel of laughs as I stumble through a career filled with Forrest Gump-like circumstances. I even talk like Gump, so I can win an Oscar. Rated R for Revolting.

The Funny Professor — Stars Eddie Murphy as an entertainer who, after what seems like 32 lousy movies in a row, finally makes one people would pay money to see. Then he appears on Oprah with the most ridiculous-looking hairdo I've ever seen on a man, again proving the adage "all the money in the world can't buy taste" is true. Or was he still in the "Grandma" character from the movie? Rated D for do the Dining room scenes again.

Diving the USS Arizona

Sgt. William Poff
Staff writer

Encountering a reef can be an unique diving experience, especially when the reef is the tomb of 1,100 Sailors and Marines.

The barnacle-encrusted wreck of the USS Arizona, while not authorized as a dive spot, is a substantial treasure trove of information for the National Parks Service's Submerged Cultural Research Unit.

In 1983 the question of "what's there" arose. Superintendent Gary Cummins wanted to know several things: what sort of integrity the hull retained, whether it was in imminent danger of falling apart and where the oil, which so conspicuously leaked from the ship, was coming from.

"A major survey and site assessment was commenced and underwater mapping specialists drew detailed maps of the wreck," said Jim E. Adams, cultural resources specialist and underwater archaeologist for the National Parks Service. "Archaeologists did a study on the ship and possible entry locations for the bomb or torpedo that sunk the ship. What stands out is the fact that these talented divers sought and brought back for us was not artifacts, not souvenirs, not booty — simply knowledge.

"We are now trying to answer the question of 'what's happening to what's there?'" added Adams, a former Marine captain. "The rate of corrosion on an multicompositional metal structure resting in an a biochemical soup is hard to estimate."

Adam's dive team consists of two active duty Marines from here. The three Marines simply call themselves the National Parks Service Dive Team

"I volunteer my time to the NPS by assisting Jim with his underwater assessments, this is my service to the community," said Capt. Robert P. Venema, Marine Aviation Logistics Support Element. "I've got approximately 20 dives on site, and have never lost focus of what we are trying to accomplish here or the sanctity of the memorial."

"I have approximately 80 dives helping Jim with his work," said MSgt. Todd S. Hall, Naval Aviation Engineering Support Unit detachment. "I feel what I am doing is not only important because the USS Arizona is a National Historic Landmark but also this was the first study on the effects of corrosion on shipwrecks and what we can do to preserve it."

The two divers slowly negotiate the harbor's murky waters. Their destination, mere feet away: a tortured metal hulk 608 feet long, speckled with the brilliant colors of a variety of tropical fish who have made the wreck an artificial reef for sea life. The divers reach their destination and begin to survey its condition.

The looming hulk, its top only a few feet below the water's surface, slowly reveals its mysteries as the divers measure and take photos.

Working diligently, the divers take time to carefully and reverently clean the sealife from a section of the wreck's stern to reveal chalky white letters that haven't been above water since Dec. 7, 1941 — A-R-I-Z-O-N-A.

The divers have as unique a tie to the sea as the USS Arizona, the ship they're surveying, does. They're Marines volunteering time to the National Parks Service to assist in the stewardship of this historic landmark.

Capt. Robert P. Venema, Marine Aviation Logistics Support Element and MSgt. Todd S. Hall, Naval Aviation Engineering Support Unit detachment, dive the USS Arizona and USS Utah assisting in research for the Submerged Cultural Resources Study, which is determining the amount of corrosion the ship's hulls are being subjected to.

"I've known Jim Adams, who is an underwater archaeologist, since 1987," said Hall. "He was originally a volunteer for the Parks Service before we were established as a dive team. He eventually took over the corrosion monitoring process on the hull of the ship that commenced in 1983."

Assisting Adams with his surveys, the two Marines never lost perspective of the ship, a tomb for over 1,100 Sailors and Marines.

"After much study and research of drawings I still wasn't prepared for the devastation the ship sustained," said Venema. "A 'rock-solid' battleship, which in the bow section was literally crumpled and peeled out like a tin, it's simply amazing."

"Looking at the pictures of the crew without the dates in the captions, you would swear it was nor-

The wrecked Arizona is a crystallized moment in time, its death wounds visible and still bleeding oil.

"The oil in the ship is thick, commonly referred to as fuel no. 6 or Bunker C type oil," said Adams. "This is the heaviest of the fuel oils and the ship is leaking a gallon or so of this viscous liquid a day. There is no way to know how much oil remains in the wreck or if a potential oil spill will occur with the continual deterioration of the hull."

"The oil itself also poses a problem to the interior of the ship," Adams added. "When oil sits, a corrosive type of bacteria will actually grow in it. While oil normally has a preservative quality to metal, this oil harbors billions of bacteria which are caustic to metal at an unknown rate of corrosion."

It is believed the ship is void of air pockets. "No one on the team has ever penetrated the wreck," said Adams. "It would be too dangerous and it would also affect the sanctity of a final resting place for honored war dead.

"This lack of oxygen in the interior compartments would probably make the inside surfaces less susceptible to rust than the exterior," Adams added.

Now knowing the hull is being attacked from two directions, Adams started to measure the corrosion rate on the exterior of the ship to give them a known variable. "Marine invertebrates, or biofouling, contribute greatly to the appearance of the vessel, but not necessarily to the decay of the hull," Adams said. "Research conducted during the course of the survey indicates biofouling may be inhibiting corrosion."

"The layer of hard fouling growth creates a low oxygen condition at the metal's surface, thus reducing the corrosion rate to far below what mal, modern-day Sailors and Marines performing their daily tasks," added Venema. "The crew looked like young men I've seen around base."

Diving the Arizona can be very emotional experience — certain instances affect people in different ways.

"It's an awe-inspiring opportunity to be up close and personal with this sacred monument," said Hall. "Some of my more exhilarating moments were on my first dive. We were at the stern of the wreck by the rudder and we came upon the word 'Arizona' — that made everything so much more real. Also swimming back from the bow of the ship at about the 20-foot mark, the ship's decking just falls into the silt.

"This is a true visual indication of the destruction sustained by the ship when the forward magazines exploded," added Hall. "Back a little further, the big 14-inch guns are looming out at you in the murky harbor waters. It's all very surreal, especially in the exposed galley section where sits a coffee mug a member of the crew actual-

Na Keiki Rainbow offers easy alternative to child care worries for base families

LCpl. Douglas A. LaGore

Dad has to get up at zero-dark thirty to lead P.T. and Mom needs to go to Pearl Harbor today for an appointment, but their two children are definitely too young to stay by themselves. This should not be a problem, since the Na Keiki Rainbow will gladly step to the challenge of watching youngsters five days a week. The early childhood education facility offers parents day care for their children while they attend to the rigors of military careers and everyday life. The Family Services Facility, located behind the 7-Day Store, adjacent to the Family Housing office, was established 15 years ago, according to Marilyn Giese, director, Na Keiki Rainbow.

"Originally there were both hourly and full-day care on the base, but about two years ago the two facilities joined under one roof in an effort to provide the same services for both types of care," said the Giese. "Parents can leave their young ones with us on an hourly basis or for a morning or afternoon."

Na Keiki Rainbow has resources and instructors to handle 22 youngsters at any one time. There are numerous play-grounds with all the bells and whistles, and private playgrounds for each of the classrooms. But the kids and attendants don't stay on the grounds all of the time.

"We take the children on field trips whenever we can get them out," said Giese. "We have gone to the Bishop Museum, Polynesian Cultural Center and the zoo to name a few."

Other chaperoned trips have included a visit to Camp Smith, tours around the base and trips to pet health centers.

Currently Na Keiki Rainbow is finishing its summer programs, but regular services will continue throughout the year.

Programs offered by the facility vary depending on the care required for the youngsters. There is an 8:30 to 11:30 a.m.

LCpl. Douglas LaGore
The fun does not stay inside as this little one found out. Ample space is provided for all.

LCpl. Douglas LaGore
Interaction between children and their parents plays a key role at Na Keiki Rainbow. Students, parents and teachers routinely get together for events aimed at supporting the children. Some events have included Hawaiian-style luaus.

STRend competitors step up to challenge

Louise Cheng, civilian, headlined the open female division of the the 2nd MCB Hawaii STRend Fitness Challenge.

LCpl. Steven Williams
Staff writer

Marines were pumping iron against some of Hawaii's fittest athletes here Saturday as they participated in the 2nd MCB Hawaii STRend Fitness Challenge. Against world champion Sonki Hong, an Army first lieutenant from Fort Shafter, Marines like Shane Benton from 3d Marines and Christopher Wagner of 1st Radio Battalion placed high in the challenge.

"It's a full spectrum challenge," said Paul Southern, a Navy corpsman who took second with his work-out partner, Claude English, in the team division.

"Everything is involved." Hong, 31, dominated the event in the elite division with a final score of 5.4. However, Benton was close behind with 3.5.

Benton beat Hong at the bench press, pumping out 24 reps to Hong's 23. But Hong came back on the pull-up bar with 21 pull-ups to Benton's half dozen. Benton remained behind until the bar dips station where he dipped 27 to Hong's 20.

Benton was unable to close the huge gap Hong made between them, but he stood his ground for the second-place trophy. More importantly, he earned 20 points for 3d Marines toward the Commander's Cup race.

Wagner, 36, took second in the male open division, earning 18 points for 1stRadBn in the CC race. He was just four one-hundredths of a point from first-place finisher J. P. Gerner, a 38-year-old Sailor.

Marine Aaron Lara massaged the opposition in the basic division with a score of 8.3 to Bill Burgess' 3.3. Among other monster scores, Lara pumped out 31 pull-ups followed by 26 chin-ups and a run time of 21:45.

bench press, pull-ups, military press, chin-ups, bar dips and a three-mile run. Athletes have a time limit of three minutes for the first five events. They perform as many repetitions as they can, then use the remainder of the three minutes to rest for the next station.

"You don't get much time to rest," said Scott Balmos, a 1stRadBn Marine who finished in third place with his partner in the team category. "It makes you push yourself to the limit."

After completing the five upper body disciplines, the competitors use what energy they have left to carry them on a three-mile run around base. Stacy Hester, a Marine from 1stRadBn, had the fastest run time with 18:32.

One fabulous run or a high set of repetitions wasn't enough to take gold in STRend however. The number of total repetitions in the upper body tests divided by the individual's run time was the STRend Factor, or deciding score.

"STRend is a challenge mentally and physically," said Hong. "You need a balance mentally, physically and in endurance to stay truly physically fit."

With physical fitness being an important part of every day life for Marines, Hester said some came into the event just to see how in-shape they really were. "It lets you know where you stand in overall physical fitness," Hester said as beads of sweat slowly rolled down his face. "You get really worn out, but it's a great feeling of accomplishment."

All competitors in STRend challenge events qualify for the STRend world championships scheduled for March 1997 at Camp H.M. Smith.

LCpl. Steven Williams
Sonki Hong, a soldier at Fort Shafter and 1996 STRend World Champion, ran his way to the top of the Elite Division.

Young readers recognized at Summer Reading Program for their achievements

LCpl. Steven Williams
Staff writer

Instead of training in a gym every day or swimming for hours on end, some youngsters here were curling up with their favorite books to earn gold medals this summer.

Leah Fournier, 5, was the overall gold medalist in the base library's annual Summer Reading Program, reading 255 books.

"I liked 'Goldilocks and the Three Bears,'" Fournier said, displaying her pearly whites. "My favorite was Curious George. His master said don't get into trouble, but he always did."

All 79 participants received certificates for their accomplishments. The children were each given one star and a McDonald's gift certificate for every 15 books they read. Readers like Fournier could have made their own constellation with the stars they received.

While Fournier out-read the kids in all

LCpl. Steven Williams

Each youngster was given a certificate for their accomplishments.

three age groups, six-year-old Ashleigh Chambers, visiting from Omaha, Neb., took top honors in the 6 to 9-year old division with 150 books.

"I liked reading 'Samantha' the best," Chambers said investigating the plastic gold circle hanging from her neck. "I learned how to read better."

Charity Edmond, 13, proved to be the hungriest bookworm in the 10 and older group, gobbling up 75 books.

"It was fun," said Edmond. "You get to read a lot of different books. You get more reading skills and you're able to read faster."

The program started June 20 and kids were flipping pages until Aug. 7. Since this is an Olympic year, Shirley Wilson, library technician, said they rewarded the top readers with gold, silver and bronze medals.

"It helps them in learning to read and see the stories come to life," said Wilson. "It also helps to develop imagination."

The stories they read may have been imaginary, but the medals were very real for readers like Kaitlin Chambers who read her way to a silver medal in the zero to 5-year-old group by finishing off 150 books. Justin Gachalian completed 135 publications for silver in the 6- to 9-year old division. Andrea Romero took the second place slot in the 10 and older group with 45 books.

For the bronze medal, Lisa Marie Medina finished up with 105 books in the zero to 5 group while Angela Kaleta read 30 books in the 10 and older column. Five youngsters took third-place medals in the six to nine year-olds division, including Stedman Benskin, Ashley Ann Day, Reynaldo Romer, Madelynn Velazquez and Desiree Velazquez. Each were tied at 45 books a piece.

Overall, the 5 and under group completed 2175 books, while the 6- to 9-year olds finished 885. And the bookworms in the 10 and older category achieved a total of 225 books at the end of the program.

LCpl. Steven Williams

Charity Edmond, 13, receives a gold medal from Shirley Wilson for finishing 75 books to win the ten and older category in the library's Summer Reading Program.

ly drank from."

Actually being able to reach out and touch something that substantial is hard to put into words, confessed Hall.

"What really hit home with me was seeing the name at the stern of the ship," agreed Venema. "I also treat it as doing a battlefield study, instead of walking a patch of earth, I am one of few privileged enough to dive this memorial, which is viewed by many as hallowed ground."

Another one of the services the dive team provides for the Parks Service is interments for the survivors of the Pearl Harbor attack who's final wish is to return and be with fallen comrades, said Hall.

"I have done two interments thus far and more are scheduled for the future," said Hall. "We will take the ashes, which are in a metal box, and take them back to barrette number four, which was the foundation for the ship's rear turret, and drop the box so it penetrates deep into the ship's bowels."

"At no time do we penetrate the ship," assured Venema. "We mostly take measurements of corrosion and biofouling, occasionally we will look into interior spaces for evaluation of the wreck but go no further so as not to disturb the sanctity of the tomb."

The two Marines described an indicator visible to visitors on the memorial to judge the amount of destruction to the bow section of the ship. Look at the number two turret, with its top barely visible at low tide, then look at the barrette or ring of steel prominently exposed on the north side of the memorial, compare the two. The barrette or foundation of the number two turret was originally higher than gun number three's, said Venema.

"The explosion of 120 tons of powder in the bow blew up and forward, then the deck collapsed approximately 23 feet," Venema said.

Another interesting bit of information to Marines is the fact our current commandant's father was stationed aboard the USS Arizona in the 1930s as a lieutenant with the Marine detachment, said Hall.

According to Paul Stillwell, in his book Battleship Arizona, published by Naval Institute Press, while serving on board the Arizona, the feisty 2nd Lt. Victor "Brute" Krulak, discovered that he didn't always see eye to eye with

Capt. Theodore H. Cartwright, the commanding officer of the ship's Marine detachment. The gunnery sergeant of the detachment was Walter Holzworth, whom Krulak greatly respected. Holzworth was willing to give Krulak advice when he asked for it, so the lieutenant said, "Gunny, I want to make a success of this profession. Tell me how to get along with the captain."

He said, "It's real easy, Lieutenant. Just find out what the old son of a b--- wants and give it to him."

Years later, Krulak remembered, "I never forgot that advice. And you'll find Holzworth's name on that white tablet out there at Pearl Harbor. He went down with the Arizona."

The work the Marines provide to the National Parks Service, the USS Arizona and its Memorial will keep the eternal grave of the service members who paid the ultimate sacrifice forever maintained and untouched except by the forces of mother nature.

would be expected on a non-fouled surface," Adams continued. "Exfoliation is clearly a major process causing hull decomposition."

After the USS Arizona sank, Pearl Harbor was known to be a sewage dumping ground for many years. Ironically, the sewage may have contributed to the ship's preservation by creating a very fertile environment for marine growth. "Although cleanup of the harbor is a positive concept, it may be some what negative in terms of marine growth protecting the hulls," said Adams.

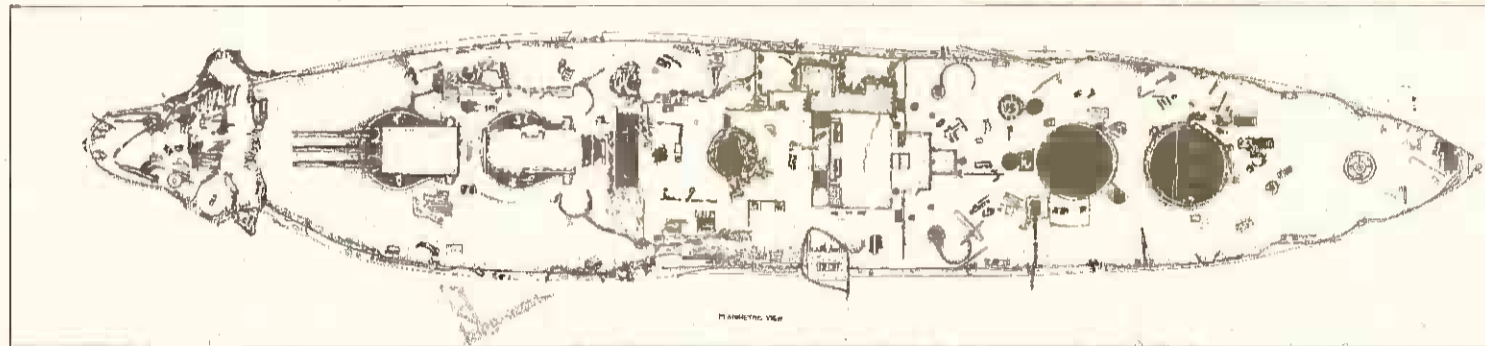

What is alarming is the rate of deterioration of the exposed parts of the wreck, especially the windward side of barrette number three. "Barrette number three, the ship's foundation for the third turret back, is a whole inch thinner on the windward side due to tidal action and the energy level generated by tradewinds," Adams said.

The dive team fulfills a public relations need, representing the Marine Corps and their respective commands well. Their volunteer work at the memorial is also greatly appreciated by the National Parks Service.

"I dove with the team the other week and noticed the professional nature with which the dive team conducted their work," said Kathy Billings, superintendent of the Arizona Memorial. "It's very emotional working around this vessel, down there you face the reality of what happened on Dec. 7, 1941."

For many visitors, the USS Arizona Memorial is a "silent protest against smugness and unpreparedness," to be used as a warning to future generations about being caught unprepared and by surprise. Thanks to the work of the Marines and National Parks Service, it will remain a reminder for a long time.

Single Marines say thanks

Renee Valdov
Single Marine Program Coordinator

Everyone here at the Single Marine Program and within Morale, Welfare and Recreation would like to thank all of you who attended BayFest '96. The Bathub Regatta was so much fun. Everyone who came out on Sunday and participated were wonderful, and the esprit de Corps was evident throughout.

The military category champions were the captain and crew of the "H20" Helo" from MALSEK. Great job guys. We had 13 entrants and everyone finished. Well, almost everyone. The crew of the "Duct Tape" at least tried. All of you out there who didn't think you could build anything that would float, take a look at the entrants this year and start working on your boat for next year.

Come and join in on all the fun at the Aloha Country Cowboy Cookout and party. The cost is $30 per person and this includes all you can eat, transportation and four hours of nothing but a great time. All you guys and gals out there who got the hankerin' for some good old fashioned country and western music, line dancing and rodeo activities, come on out and join us. We will leave at 11 a.m. Sept. 13 from building 1629, the Enlisted Club. This is a great opportunity for all of you that want to experience the western atmosphere of Hawaii. Stop by the SMP center in building 1629 or call 254-7592 for more information.

Well, you asked for it and you got it — the renovations for the SMP centers at K-Bay and Camp Smith are slated to begin soon. The plans are wonderful and there is no doubt once the renovations are complete, the SMP center will be the place to go.

Imagine watching your favorite teams on an 80-inch projection TV, in surround sound, no less. If you would like to know more about the renovations, stop by and we'll be happy to give you a tour.

The August SMP Council meeting will be Aug. 23 at 3:30 in the SMP Center at the E-Club. Don't miss the opportunity to be an active voice in the issues that are truly relevant to the lives of single Marines and Sailors aboard Marine Corps Base Hawaii.

The SMP is in need of volunteers. If you would like to learn more about how to improve things here and have a great atmosphere to do it in, call 254-7592 for more information.
