Marines brave tragedy at Falls

Cpl. Trent Lowry Combat Corresponder

Two Kancohe Bay Marines played a significant part of rescue efforts after a clear, sunny Mother's Day at Sacred Falls, a popular Oahu recreation site, quickly turned into a scene of horror May 9.

The blue sky became obscured by rocks, dirt and debris when a rockslide barreled down the falls, a favorite site for outdoor enthusiasts. 'Eight people were killed and many more were injured when the avalanche of rocks plowed through what was once a serene scene.

"It sounded like thunder at first, and then it got real quiet," said Cpl. Matthew Nelson, a scout/super with Headquarters and Service around to see if the people who were with him Company, 1st Battalion, 3rd Marine Regiment, who was visiting the Falls with his girlfriend, Natalie Bann, and her brother and sister-in-law. "Then the sky was filled with rocks." he added.

Until that fateful moment, Nelson said "it was the nicest day I'd ever seen up there. I'd never seen so much as a pebble fall before.'

Nelson and Cpl. Jason Hill, a pianist with the Marine Forces Pacific hand, were two of the Fall's visitors present to witness the path of terror the rockslide caused. Both Marines remained level-headed and were instrumental in relief efforts to help the injured park visitors.

were alright. Unfortunately, Aaron Bann, brother of Nelson's girlfriend, Natalie, was one of the first fatalities of the landslide. Natalie and Cindy, Aaron's wife, were also hadly injured.

"At first 1 spent my time going between Natalie and Cindy," said Nelson, who also suffered bruises and cuts, which required stitches. Nelson said after the women were taken out of immediate danger of the rocks that continued to clatter down the monntain after the main slide, he returned to help others.

"All I thought at the time was that I needed to be (where the victims were), because I knew I Nelson said the first thing he did was look - could help," Nelson said. "Anybody would have done the same thing."

Hill was just around the bend from the impact area when the landslide hit.

"It's unimaginable what I saw out there," said 21-year-old Hill, whose injuries-a twisted ankle and muscle soreness which gave him a crooked, limping gait for two days after the tragedyoccurred from his labors in heaving people out of the debris.

Hill and a friend, Navy Petty Officer 3rd Class Jay Long, were hiking when they saw people with various injuries run past them to safety.

"I was scared for about four seconds, and then

Marine prepares to return to skies

Col. David Salazar Combat Correspondent

When a helicopter accident left a Marine Heavy Helicopter squadron 362 Marine injured Oct. 14, the possibilities that he would fully recover were slim in the eyes of his doctors.

But Tuesday, more than seven months after the accident, Lance Cpl. Peter Lyons, an HMH-362 airframes mechanic, rode on the same CH-53D helicopter which nearly ended his life last fall.

"I want to be the first passenger in (aircraft) 19 since it's been repaired," Lyons said.

According to Gunnery Sgt. Franklin Kline. the airframes chief at HMH-362, the fact that both Lyons and the aircraft are both working again is an inspiration to HMH-362 leathernecks.

"I think it's really great that a bird hurt so bad is going up again," Kline said. "Anytime an aircraft is down for that long, it's pretty motivating for the Marines when it gets back up.

"And just having Lyons back in the shop is a morale booster in itself." Kline added.

Kline said Lyons' spirit and determination is enough to keep the shop. running.

"He really (works hard). If I had ten of him in my shop, I wouldn't need anyone else." Kline said.

K-Bay flight simulator upgraded

Lance Cpl. Otto C. Pleil-Muele Combat Correspo

Marine aviators from MCB Hawaii. Kaneobe Bay began jumping into the pilot's seat of the base's newly advanced CH-53D flight simulator May 10.

The simulator just adopted monitors to present a realistic flight environment for pilots to practice flying the CH-53D.

"It's really quite remarkable," said Col. Terry Gordon, commanding officcr of Aviation Support Element Kaneohe, after testing the updated simulator. "It gives us a great opportunity to practice some of the things we don't get a chance to do all the time," he added, which includes landing on a ship and flying in formations.

According to Monte Aye, the site manager for Reflectone Training Systems, the simulator was installed about a year ago and it has been used since then, but without the monitors.

For the past couple months, though, the five monitors have been in the installation process. Now, instead of a blacked-out cockpit, pilots can see nmways and landing zones through the program setup. Currently, the program shows an aerial view of Okinawa.

"I'm pleased to have the visual capabilities," said Gordon.

"There are a few 'bugs' we need to work out, but that's expected," said Hank Tripp, the simulator instructor.

One of the key differences between flight in the simulator as compared to actual flight in a CII-53D, according to Tripp, is the effect of the simulator on pilots, also known as a form of "flicker vertigo."

This occurs when the pilots in the simulator notice a slight difference in the response from the controls when compared to actual flight in a CH-53D and this causes a psychological reaction that usually triggers cold sweats at first, according to Tripp The simula-

Sergeant Major's Corner Don't dishonor your title

Sgt. Maj. Robert W. Holub

Just when you think that a person could not possibly be more stupid, someone proves you wrong. As Marine Forces Pacific sergeant major, I see both good and bad reports. I read a report recently about an act so incredibly stupid that I am still in a state of disbelief.

I do not normally do this, but because the incident was so incredibly callous, and stupid, I decided to share it with you in hopes it will help prevent it from happening again. I hope you find the incident as repugnant as I do. I also hope you understand my anger with those few Marines who would dishonor the title of "United States Marine."

While on leave in Arizona, a Marine apparently thought it would be "funny" to booby trap an elementary school by using some pyrotechnics called "flash bangs," that he allegedly took from his unit. Flash bangs are simulated booby traps used in training. When triggered they emit a flash of smoke and light with a loud bang.

Stealing is a crime, but this act, following so shortly after the high school shootings in Colorado, makes it tragic. When caught, this feather merchant's response to police was that he was an instructor at Camp Pendleton. He said the pyrotechnics were easy to get. He told police he did it as a "prank," but afterwards, when reminded of the killings in Colorado, it began to dawn on him that it was probably a bad idea. Bad idea?

That is an understatement if I ever heard one!

The Marine showed police a bag containing a variety of pyrotechnics belonging to his unit. A couple nights prior to this incident, a star cluster aerial flare was shot off in his > neighborhood. As of this writing, the Marine has not been charged with firing the star cluster.

Following the elementary school incident, the Marine was arrested and will face a state judge later this month. The FBI has decided to let the Marine Corps investigate how he got the pyrotechnics.

If you think this won't effect you, guess again. The next time you go to the field, can you imagine how many new ways you will have to account for the ammo and pyrotechnics? How many Marines will see an increase in paper work to account for these items which are so often used in training?

When someone "stinks up the nest," we all suffer from the loss of credibility. What is even more nauseating is this "bird" was an NCO! That is perhaps the most shameful part of this whole incident. He may have had the stripes on his uniform, but he never was a real NCO. Real NCOs don't do things like that

What if a little kid had picked up one of those flash bangs? I have seen those things blow grown men's fingers off. What would it have done to a little kid? He called it a prank.

A newspaper account of the incident reported a man told police he was walking near the school when he stepped on a trip wire that triggered a small booby trap. What if it had been an elderly grandfather or grandmother who had a heart attack and died when the pyrotechnic went off?

I have seen a lot of stupid stuff in my life. I have even done some dumb stuff when I was younger. But this one is at the all time top-of-the-list for the dumbest things I have ever heard of a Marine doing. True Marines do not do this kind of stuff! We are supposed to be the protectors of our countrymen, not terrorist pranksters. We are supposed to be the knights in shining armor for little kids --role models. Marines should not be the ones who make them afraid to go to school.

When one of our Marines fails to live up to the high standards of the Corps, all of us are tarnished. When one fails to live up to our ethos of honor, courage and commitment we all share the blame.

I wonder if any of his fellow Marines knew that he possessed pyrotechnics from his unit? When we allow someone to brea regulations and say nothing, we are just as guilty as they are. To do nothing when others are breaking the law is the most heinous crime a Marine can commit. Marines don't do stuff like this.

I personally hope they throw the book at him. In my opinion, this was not a prank. A prank is hiding the erasers in class. I feel this was a criminal act that should be punished to the full extent of the law. I hope he and whoever helped him, or knew he had pyrotechnics and didn't tell anyone, go to jail for a long time.

Marines are not thugs and juvenile delinquents. We are the men and women America trusts and relies upon to do the right thing! Marines are who our youth should look up to. Semper Fi.

CMC looking for questions from Marines

Press Release Base Inspector's Office

The Commandant of the Marine Corps is seeking questions to ask the Corps. Marines are being asked to submit questions that may be presented to leathernecks world-wide. In Marine Administrative Message 191105Z, March 1999, an initiative to focus attention on key issues of concern to the future of the Corps is announced. The initiative seeks questions that may stimulate leathernecks' to provide solutions to challenges to Marines and the Corps as it approached the 21st century.

The MarAdmin message reminds Marines that Marine Mail was established in 1995, as part of the commandant's planning guidance. Three specific criteria were cited to solicit ideas to prepare the Corps for the 21st century. A fourth criterion was established 1997.

The criteria includes what we are doing that we shouldn't be doing, what we aren't doing that we should be doing and what new idea, tactic, concept or piece of equipment should the Marine Corps explore to increase its warfighting capability.

This most recent initiative is presented as an extension to the commandant's plan.

Questions submitted should be pertinent to all Marines, not just those in a specific geographic area or individual situation, as the commandant will pose the selected question(s) to the entire Marine Corps.

Those seeking to submit their questions should e-mail questions to the deputy base inspector, Master Gunnery Sgt. Robert A. Flores at floresra@exemh1.mcbh.usme.mil. For questions on this topic, call the deputy base inspector at 257-7717.

Sailors, Marines work to support Salam orphanage

BALI, Indonesia — There are many ways to enjoy a day out of work on a tropical-island paradise. Many relax on the sunny beaches. Others try to surf the perfect wave. Some venture down the white-water rapids.

But for 146 Marines and Sailors of the Boxer Amphibious involved in the Ready Group, the day was well spent lending a helping hand to the Salam Orphanage here May 1.

Volunteers took a one-hour bus ride to a home for 5-12 year old Indonesian orphans to spend five hours under the tropical sun painting, laying floor tiles and carrying bricks and rocks to make preparations for a property retaining wall.

"This many people taking a day of liberty to do this project is really nice," said Petty Officer 1st Class Ramona Grim, who participated in the community relations project at the orphanage. "That says a lot about our priorities, especially in Bali."

Much of the work took place in five bedrooms where the servicemembers repainted walls with a fresh coat of white paint. New ceramic white tile was installed on the floor of one of the bedrooms, while additional tiles were brought in to tile the other bedrooms at a later date

Others took on the labor-intensive task of staging materials for the building of a retaining wall. Human chains were set up to earry bricks, piles of sand, and truckloads of rocks down the hillside.

The day for Sailors and Marines also included lots of time devoted to the children.

"The big thing is the interaction with the children," said Chief Petty Officer Vince O'Bannon. "They see the work, but they will remember the lasting impression of the interaction with the kids."

"For mány project. this was the first time to participate in such an event. It is a wonderful thing we are doing for the children," said Officer Petty 3rd Class Tracy Culbert, a first time volunteer for a communi-

Finance Marines preparing for deployment

Pfc. Roman Yurek Combot Corresponden

Two MCB Hawaii, Kaneohe Bay, finance Marines are being tasked with providing the support of an entire finance office during an upcoming deployment May 28 to Southeast Asia.

Staff Sgt. Christian Ramstorff, an auditor, and Cpl. Salvatore Bullock, noncommissioned office in charge of discharge and temporary lodging and allowances, will join Combat Service Support Group 3 leathernecks as a part of the Cooperation Afloat Readiness and Training exercise, as the finance office support.

"It's a great opportunity," said Ramstorff, "this is my first deployment."

But they won't completely be without additional support.

Before they get their feet wet, they are training to use new equipment and software that will give them similar capabilities to those available at a base Finance Office, according to 1st. Lt. Jason J. Latona, the finance officer for the K-Bay finance department. They will use new laptop computers, printers, and scanners

Another piece of equipment the finance personnel are learning to use is the Beretta 9mm pistol. Since the finance Marines will be carrying cash while on deployment, they will be required to be armed to better help them guard the money. Handling a pistol instead of an M16A2 service rifle makes transporting the money easier, according to Bullock.

Latona added that Ramstorff and Bullock are not alone in the pistol and new equipment training. All the finance Marines are getting trained to use these, so that they are all prepared for future deployments.

No matter how many deployments or Marines the finance personnel need to support, Latona expressed his confidence in the finance Marines.

"Whether it's 300 or 3,000 Marines, we're (the finance office), ready to meet the challenge," said Latona.

The next deployment currently on the finance officer's schedule is Exercise Crocodile '99, which will take place in Australia.

I snapped out of it, knowing that there were injured people and that we could help," Hill said.

Hill and Nelson were just two of the many people who assisted in the emergency efforts. But both devil dogs attribute their ability to handle the emergency situation to their Marine Corps training.

"I think my Marine Corps training helped me a lot," Nelson said, "I was able to take charge of the situation, and I kept myself busy so I didn't think about it."

Hill said he also had basic splinting training in the Boy Scouts, took cardiopulmonary resuscitation classes in high school, and the emergency training taught in Marine boot camp was a huge help.

"I'm not any kind of expert, but I never felt helpless. I knew what needed to be done," Hill said.

Though both Marines were instrumental in relief efforts, both men spoke with humility about their experiences.

"It's too bad it takes a situation like this to bring out the best in people," said Nelson, who is currently on leave to attend Aaron's funeral and offer support to the Bann family. "My friends have been great, and everyone in my command has been unrealistically cooperative. I'm just trying to find a way to deal with this."

Cindy Bann will not be able to make the trip to southern California for her husband's functal, as she is still recovering from her injuries in an Oahu hospital. Nelson said she "is heating real well. She's amazingly strong."

He declined to talk about Aaron, though, out of respect for the Bann family.

tor responds slightly later than an actual CH-53D would.

Tripp said flicker vertigo especially happens to well-experienced pilots that have gotten used to the way a CH-53 should respond to certain actions.

Because of this reaction, Tripp said pilots don't actually fly a real aircraft for at least 24 hours after flying in the simulator.

An advantage of having the simulator, though, is that pilots can be given 10 groups of emergency situations to practice responding to, according to Tripp. Many of these situations, including several different vibrations, can't be practiced on a real aircraft, Tripp said.

Several-units of K-Bay Marines will get the opportunity to fly the simulator but pilots under instruction will have precedence.

Alcohol abuse may eventually take more than money from Marines

I lost... my career, my marriage and a son on a daily basis...

'Derek'

Former Marine and recovering alcoholic

And it can weaken people's

Staff Sgt. Luis P. Valdespine Jr. Press Chief

Editor's note: This is the third in a series of Alcohol Abuse Awareness Month articles. Next week the topic will be alternatives to abusing alcohol.

A six-pack of beer at the Package Store may only cost servicemembers about $4, but for some servicemembers the cost of alcohol can be much higher.

For those who abuse alcohol, the price paid can come in the form of health problems, financial problems, and even personal losses such as loss of a family member or marriage.

The health problems caused by the abuse or misuse of alcohol can vary, depending on an individual's drinking habits, according Roger O'Guin, director of the MCB Hawaii Substance Abuse Counseling Center.

Many drugs, in general, are harmful to a person's body, O'Guin said. But alcohol. O'Guin explained, is especially harmful to brain tissue because it is not only a depressant, but it also dehydrates.

Alcohol also can have harmful effects on essential organs, such as one's pancreas and liver. O'Guin add creas and liver, O'Guin added. immune systems, he said.

But whether or not one ever has any major health problems caused by alcohol, one can still be just as or more severely impacted because of the the effect alcohol may cause on a person's judgement, O'Guin said.

After drinking alcohol, some people may make irrational and harmful decisions such as to spend more money than they can afford to spend, or to drive while impaired, or even to get involved in illegal substances.

O'Guin said of the Marines referred to the SACC for the use of illicit substances, "more than one-half admitted they were intoxicated when they did."

Derek (whose last name is not being published to protect his privacy), who was discharged from the Marine Corps last year for his use of illegal drugs, said that was always the case in his uses.

"I never did drugs without drinks," the ecovering alcoholic said.

Derek explained that when he would drink alcoholic beverages, he would lose sight of sound judgment.

But the abuse of alcohol cost him more than his judgement, he said.

"I lost a ton of money, which was the least of my worries; my career, my marriage, and a chance to be with my son on a daily basis," said the former leatherneck of eight years.

"I was constantly lying... setting up times and things so I could drink. I set my whole life up to drink, not to spend time with my wife or my son," said Derek, who explained that he used to spend time with his son, but because he was often consumed with his drinking plans and habits, he was still missing out on his son's life.

And by the time Derek said he made the decision to quit drinking and abusing alcohol, he also had to pay for charges under the Uniform Code of Military Justice, which is common for servicemembers.

According to Base Legal Office personnel, the UCMJ has seven punitive articles that specifically describe alcohol-related offenses, and two additional articles, 92 (failure to obey orders or regulations/dereliction of duty), and 133 (conduct unbecoming an officer) > that provide a basis for disciplinary action for alcohol related miseonduct. Depending on their specific incident and their respective commanders, punishments can vary, explained Capt. Mario R. Verna, a trial counselor with the MCB Hawaii Legal Center.

> For violators of articles 92 and 133. and servicemembers who are charged for drunken or reckless operation; being drunk on duty; disorderly conduct (while drunk); incapacitation for performance of duties through prior wrongful indulgence in intoxicating liquor; being a drunk prisoner; and drinking liquor with a prisoner, a commander can decide to issue nonjudicial punishment, or recommend a court martial for the violator, Verna said.

Punishments can include confinement, forfeiture of pay, reduction in pay grade, and possibly a bad conduct discharge, Verna explained.

So even though one may have just paid a few dollars for a few alcoholic beverages, servicemembers who abuse or misuse alcohol could end up paying more than they bargained for.

Verna added that although the punishments vary, alcohol is involved in most cases of UCMJ violations he sees.

But whatever the price an individual pays for his or her abuse of alcohol. Verna and others who see the results of people misusing alcohol seem to agree alcohol abuse can definitely change lives and be costly.

'Golden Eagles' make K-Bay new home

Lance Cpl. Otto C. Pleil-Muete

Navy Patrol Squadron 9, "Golden Eagles," had an open house Friday at Hangar 104 after finishing their transition from Barbers Point Naval Air Station to their new home aboard MCB Hawaii. Kaneohe Bay

The squadron's mission has expanded over the years from anti-submarine warfare to coastland operations and currently has four P-3 C Orion aircraft at K-Bay according to Navy command Master Chief Beth Lambert.

Examples of operations the squadron is involved in include search and escue missions, surface surveillance, and medical evacuations, the time we expected to do it." according to Senior Chief Petty Officer Jeff Gonzales, operations leading petty officer for VP-

The P-3 squadrons have a very large number of enlisted Sailors as compared to other squadrons. Lambert said. About 18-22 people make up the crew for a P-3, which includes the pilots, obse vers, sensors, technicians and engineers.

The move to K-Bay has proven to be very successful according to the squadron-personnel.

"I think this is the smoothest evolution I've ever experienced," said Navy Cmdr. Matt Peters, the commanding officer of VP-9. "We did it in half

According to Lambert, the whole squadron took less than two weeks to move and encountered nothing but cooperation from K-Bay Marines.

"I think it's been a very good team effort." said Peters, who also said he enjoys the new. state-ofthe-art facilities.

"This is the first hangar that was designed for our P-3 Squadron," added Lambert. And while tailored to the needs of the squadron, the hangar and the rest of K-Bay provide a great new home for the squadron,

"This base looks like what (our Sailors) thought Hawaii would be like," said Lamhert who expressed her appreciation for the sights overlooking Kaneohe Bay from the hangar.

"Every time we come to the gate," said Peters, "we get a great Navy greeting."

In addition, Lambert'said many of the Sailors are impressed with the quality of food service they receive, adding to the many benefits of moving to K-Bay

There are two other P-3 squadrons scheduled to move to K-Bay, VP-4 and VP-47, according to Lambert. One of the three squadrons is always on deployment for six months, while the other two stay back during the 12-month Inter-Deployment Training Cycle.

K-Bay flightline increases emergency landing readiness with installation of arresting gear

K-Bay will be able to accomodate tailhook aircraft

Lance Cpl. Otto C. Pleil-Muete

Marine Corps Base Hawaii, Kaneohe Bay, is expanding it's ho izons ... well, actually its aircraft landing capabilities.

The flightline has restored its E-28 arresting gear to proper working condition after years of discontinued use and can now provide emergency arrestments for tailhook aircraft.

According to Warrant Officer Charles W. Thompson, officer-incharge of Aircraft Rescue and Firefighting Recovery, the use of the arrestment gear was discontinued several years ago due to lack of necessity. Barbers Point Naval Air Station, across the island, had its arresting gear capabilities available in case of emergency.

But since Barber's Point is closing down and its squadrons are coming to K-Bay, another accesting gear setup was needed to replace it.

The arresting gear includes two rotary hydrodynamic arresting engines, one on either side of the flightline. A thick cable lies across the flightline and connects the two engines together.

When the aircraft lands and glides down the flightline, it's tailhook, which is on the underside of the aircraft, strikes the cable. Then, the cable and arresting engines flex slightly and absorb the kinetic energy of the moving aircraft to stop it.

Although the arresting gear is used only during aborted takeoffs and emergency landings, usually brought by bad weather conditions, it must be operational and ready for use at any time, according to Thompson.

"It always has to be ready in case of an emergency," said Thompson.

And to ensure the gear is always ready, three Marine aircraft recovery specialists were brought to K-Bay to set up and maintain the arresting gear.

According to one of those Marines, Staff Sgt. William A. Nixdorf, recovery non-commissioned officer-in-charge with Marine Corps Air Facility, arresting gear is functional on both ends of the flightline for any tailhook equipped aircraft.

"Pilots of tailhook aircraft depend upon us to land during emergencies," said Nixdorf, "and that's a responsibility we take very se 'iously.'

While conducting a command authorized identification card check, military police observed the driver of a 1989 Ford pick-up truck attempt to gain access via the main gate. Upon contact with the vehicle, MPs detected a strong odor of an alcoholic beverage. Military police conducted a series of field sobriety tests on the suspect, which he failed. The MPs transported the Marine to MPD where he elected to submit a breath test resulting in a blood alcohol content of .115%. MPs processed and released the Marine to his unit representative.

Hawaii Armed Service Police reported to MPD that a Marine was arrested for assault. Two HPD officers arrested the Marine on 240 Lewer's St. just after 1:15 a.m. The HASP was unable to provide any further information and bail was not set pending further investigation.

While conducting a command authorized identification card check, MPs observed a vehicle approach the gate. Upon contact with the operator, MPs realized that the driver had his driving privileges suspended. The MPs cross referenced his ID with the base suspension list and it concurred that the driver was indeed driving while on base suspension.

K-Bay Enlisted Spouses Club supports military spouses, community

Pfc. Roman Yurek Combat Correspondent

Everyone in the Marine Corps has a mission, whether it is to recon enemy terrain or to fix a government vehicle.

The mission of the Enlisted Spouses Club is to better the MCB Hawaii, Kaneohe Bay, community by getting enlisted servicemembers' spouses involved in it.

Some ways the Enlisted Spouses Club encourages the community involvement are by rewarding volunteers with scholarships, running a thrift shop on base, and holding fundraisers to support the scholarships and base organizations such as the Navy/Marine Corps Relief Society, Marine Corps Community Services, and the American Red Cross.

The scholarships are made available to spouses and high school graduates of enlisted members who volunteer at least 100 hours of their time a year, according to Connie Nobels, the current club president.

The hours do not have to be associated with the club as long as they are with a credible organization on Oahu. For the 1998-1999 year, the club gave out nearly $77,000 in scholarships, she said.

The K-Bay Thrift Store sells donated household goods, clothes and uniform items at low prices. It is the main source of income for the club, according to Nobels. All the money the thrift store receives goes to the club for donations or scholarships.

Among other fundraisers, the club is involved with is the winter holiday gift wrapping held outside the main Marine Corps Exchange, according to Telecia Woods, a member of the club.

To be a part of the club, an enlisted servicemember's spouse needs only to attend the monthly meeting. It's held the second Monday of the month at the thrift store, located off Mokapu Road near the flightline, hehind the Marine Forces Pacific band hall.

Though spouses are not enlisted, according to Nobels, they are part of the Marine Corps family and the more volunteers, the better the club can accomplish their mission.

Key Volunteers links commands with families to aid Corps' mission

Cpl. David Salazar

The Key Volunteers program is comprised of dedicated spouses who have worked hard to build and maintain a sturdy bridge; a bridge that conjoins two important entities ----Marines' units and their families.

"Our mission is to keep families in a 'ready mode' by maintaining a good communication link between the command and families during deployments," said Frances Seybold, the Key Volunteer trainer aboard MCB Hawaii, Kaneohe Bay.

The program is designed to establish liaison between the unit and the families, so the unit can provide information and updates on how the unit is doing while it is on deployment. Seybold said the better the communication between the unit and family, the more efficient the unit will be.

"Good communication allows the Marines to focus more on their work and worry less about their families, because they know their spouse has someone to contact if they have any problems" Seybold added.

'The program makes you feel like a part of the unit...'

Frances Seybold Key Volunteer trainer

According to Diana Parker, the Key Volunteer coordinator for Marine Helicopter Training Squadron 301, the program is important because it lets families know exactly what is going on.

"While the Marines are deployed, we keep their spouses informed of what's happening out there and keep rumors at a standstill," Parker said.

Spouses interested in becoming Key Volunteers are asked to undergo a fourday training session, which greatly benefits the volunteer, Seybold said. "The program makes you feel like part of the unit," Seybold explained. "The volunteer also gets better knowledge on the Marine Corps and how it functions."

The training session offers information on Marine Corps history, unit structures, policies and traditions, Seybold said.

"The session may sound like it's long, but they get a lot of information - great information that will help them throughout their careers," Parker said.

Free tests Cats causing problems at K-Bay

Cpl. Barry Melton

What might seem a cuddly guest has been a predacious pest at MCB Hawaii, Kancohe Bay.

Both feral and household cats which roam freely here are putting protected and endangered birds, such as the Hawaiian Stilts and the Red-Footed Boobies, in danger, according to Lance Bookless, the natural recourses program manager at the MCB Hawaii Environmental Department,

"Cats, by nature, are predators," said Bookless. "If you let your cat out at night, it isn't likely to stick around by your doorstep."

One such instance of a problem cat involved a community house cat that killed almost half of a flock of ground-nesting Shearwaters here, said Bookless. The cat killed nearly 70 of these protected birds without actually consuming any of them.

"The cat simply killed for sport," said Bookless.

According to base regulations, it's prohibited to leave any animal, including house cats, unattended or unsupervised to roam around base. Also, house cats are required to have an identification chip before being registered on base.

"The cat should not be left to roam around," said Ralph Nakamoto, an area housing representative at the Kaneolie Bay Family Housing Office. "Either have the cat secured or supervise it, or we can inform the Military Police Department to pick it up."

Nakamoto also advises base residents to inform either MPD or the housing office if there is a cat in the anymore, the animal should be turned over to the neighborhood roaming freely. If the cat is found to be Hawaii Humane Society or MPD, Bookless said. a repeat offender, it can be removed from the residence. Where as a house cat might pose a threat by hunting neighborhoods here and eat out of garbage cans or a *pet's food dish.

Feral cats, concentrated mostly near the beach cottages here, carry fleas, ticks and disease, said Bookless. They shouldn't be fed or approached. They are wild animals and pose health threats.

Bookless said, if any base residents are having problems with independently roaming house cats or feral cats at their residence, contact either the environmental or housing offices, or MPD, who will refer the complaint to the military game wardens.

Secondly, if a resident has a cat they don't not want Residents should never just "drop" their cats off or abandon them.

From A-1 Sgt. Maj. William Waldier, the squadron sergeant major, had the aircraft renamed in honor of the Marine. "We named aircraft 19 'Lyons' Pride'," Waldier said. "We had the letters painted on it bright red so everyone can see it, and everyone in the squadron who sees that gets motivated."

Despite his speedy recovery, Lyons: still undergoes monthly physical therapy sessions, but has set physical goals he hopes to meet by the oneyear anniversary of the accident.

"I'm almost to the point to where I could run again," Lyons said. "My goal is to be back up to physical 'fitness test standards by October."

Kline said there was no question that the squadron would be supportive in helping Lyons recover.

"We're Marines --- we take care of our own," Kline said. "Lyons is one of ours, so we took care of him."

earn free credits

The Kaneohe Bay Joint Education Center is giving away free college credits. Well, almost.

For those who want to earn college credits without sitting through classes, college exam programs are an economical option, according to Maria Fullenwider, the test examiner at the Joint Education Center.

There are three different tests that servicemembers, their family members and DoD civilians can take at the JEC --- the College Level Exam Program tests, the Regents College Exam Program, and the Dantes Subjects Stundardized Tests, said Fullenwider,

"I think everyone should take them," said Fullenwider. "Most schools accept the credits, It all depends on which school you attend."

The tests are free to all servicemembers; however, for family members or civilians, there is a $27 fee for Dantes exams, a $44 fee for CLEP tests and costs vary for the Regents programs, Fullenwider said.

The exams do not count against one's grade point average, said Fullenwider. The only penalty involved is that students who don't meet the required passing score must wait six months before taking the same exam again. However, students are free to try any of the other exams during that period.

"The exams aren't designed to be easy, is said Beth Austin, a Chaminade University counselor...""By passing the examine means you have mastered the same material as someone who has taken that course."

Polynesian presentation dazzles audiences with new 'Creation"

Cpl. Trent Lowry Combat Correspondent

The story of man's history has been documented many ways-the Bible, G eek mythology, Mel Brooks' movie History of the World, Part L.

None of those stories may have been as exciting, though. as the retelling of human history from the viewpoint of Polynesian islanders, presented in Creation: A Polynesian Odyssey, the new dinner show at the Sheraton Princess Kaiulani hotel in Waikiki.

I've been stationed in Hawaii for more than a year, and in that time I had never taken in any of the cultural shows-such as a luau at Hale Koa or the Polynesian Cultural Center.

But. I decided to attend the premiere of Creation.

The dinner show, which runs twice a night, seven days a week, turned out to be one of the best experiences I've had since reporting for duty at MCB Hawaii, Kancohe Bay.

The evening starts off with a buffet-style dinner, and with seating times of 5:30 and 8 p.m., there's nearly an hour available for dining. Other hotel dinners I've had were nothing to write home about, but the buffet line served a variety of tasty dishes, including sliced prime rib.

While eating, diners are treated to calming Hawaiian string music. If you can save enough room, the dessert bar is also a treat for after the meal.

About an hour after seating, the lights in the dining room dim and the curtains around the stage are pulled back, erasing the fluorescent palm trees that decorate the scene during the dinner.

The show hegins as a thunderous basso voice disturbs the darkness, and a volcano erupis in a blinding display of special effects, lighting and pyrotechnics. As a matter of fact, the effects help make this show a treat to watch throughout the presentation.

Male and female actor-dancers recreate the Polynesians version of the creation of man and woman, tribal wars and romantic celebrations. Specific cultures portrayed during the show include the Maori of New Zealand and the Pacific island people of Fiji, Tahiti. Samoa and the Marquesas.

The dancers exert enough energy through their performances and numerous costume changes to propel the Concorde supersonic jet from London to Hong Kong, yet they don't even seem to break a sweat.

The dancers also take time to interact with the audience, cracking jokes and prompting replies from the crowd. A lucky few audience members were even led to the stage by the athletic female hula dancers, to shake their booties in front of God and everyone.

The highlight of the night, for me anyway, was watching Vise Vitale, the fire-knife dancer. The difficulty of his act was awe-inspiring.

Vitale amazed the entire crowd with his lightning-quick acrobatics. I won't min the show for you, but I will say his flatning fancy footwork is worth the price of admission alone.

And for a night out in Waikiki, that admission won't break the bank, either. A discount is offered for military personnel and their families, so taking in a little local culture can cost as low as $24 for an adult (for the show and cocktails).

The Creation show that may best fit the bill for military families is the 8 p.m. dinner time, which is geared more toward American and European visitors to the hotel, according to Erica MacGuyer, director of public relations for the Princess Kaiulani hotel. The early show focuses more on Asian visitors, according to MacGuyer, although both are enjoyable for all audiences.

Now. I won't say you must go to the Sheraton's Creation production specifically. It is one of a number of entertaining shows in Waikiki.

But after avoiding the various Polynesian cultural shows on Oahu for so long, I finally realized what I was missing. and I strongly suggest taking in these fun shows, no matter how long your stay in Hawaii.

A rodeo was held Saturday at the Windward Enlisted Club, but this rodeo did not have threeton longborns, wild-eyed broncos or barrel-clad clowns, which made it much more safe than a normal rodeo.

Actually, the focus of the Bike Rodeo was all about salety.

The rodeo, organized with the cooperation of MCB Hawaii, Kaneohe Bay, Boy Scouts and the K-Bay Safety Office, was held to promote bicycle safety and proper riding techniques for children.

"Any monkey can ride a bike. What's important is knowing when and how to swerve and brake to avoid canger," said Cpl. Dave Eastman, a motorcycle safety instructor with Base Safety who constructed the safety course for the rodeo and supervised the proceedings. "It's important for kids to learn to obey traffic lights and rules."

The Bike Rodeo was primarily a function of Den 225, the Boy Scouts organization on base. but was open to anyone on base or in the neighboring communities, according to scout master Rusty Bixler.

"We just want parents and kids to be safety conscious," said Tammy Meckfessel, one of the event organizers. She said part of the reason the Bike Rodeo was held in the spring, in addition to the annual fall bike rodeo, is to help prevent incidents like the two recent accidents aboard K-Bay involving children and bikes.

"Summer's coming up and kids will be out of Proper use of helmets is important, according to representatives of the military police who also assisted with the rodeo.

Phantom Menace doesn't fall short, Lucas still has magic in bag of tricks Star Wars Episode I, The Phantom Menace debuts in Hawaii theaters

Cpl. Trent Lowry Combat Corresponde

A long time ago, in a theater far, far away.

The long-awaited prequel to the classic Star Wars trilogy was on creator George Lucas' backburner for a decade. Since them, Lucas has busily prepared, planned and produced the first film in a new trilogy that pre-dates Star Wars, and the hype and rumors surrounding the film reached a crescendo in the last few months.

It's been sixteen years since I last saw a Star Wars movie on the silver screen, and as a confessed Star Wars fan I tried to keep up with all the news about the new movie. My patience was finally, richly rewarded when I attended the premiere of Star Wars Episode 1: The Phantom Menace very early Wednesday morning.

Though it is one of the most anticipated films in movie history, the release of Episode I was shrouded by lingering doubts of media and fans alike.

"Would it be as good as the original trilogy?"

Will it be worth the wait?"

Expectations were inevitably high for the Phantom Menace to be as good, if not better, than its predecessors. Throw your doubts aside, friends, because Phantom Menace does not disappoint. The prequel may not reach the "bestmovie ever" status that the first trilogy earned, but it gets pretty dog-gone close awe-inspiring soundtrack. But the prequel ups-the-ante on acting ability, enlisting the impressive talents of Liam Neeson (Schindler's List), Ewan McGregor (Trainspotting), Natalie Portman (The Professional) and Samuel L. Jackson (Pulp Fiction).

The story begins with a Trade Federation blockade around the planet Naboo, where Queen Amidala (Portman) tries to negotiate an end to the sanctions by the greedy commerce organization. The Republic Senate sends two Jedi, Qui-Gon Jinn (Neeson) and a young Obi-Wan Kenobi (McGregor) to help negotiations, but sinister forces behind the Federation's blockade have different plans.

That's all of the plot that I'll give away. Though books and television shows out there have spoiled some of the movie's secrets, actually sitting

The special effects, too, outdo the Star Wars ancestors. I was afraid that the effects would make the film look too artificial, and I'll admit that there are some places where the computergenerated creatures look a bit too twodimensional, but the technological wizardry never distracts from the story.

Many of these characters seem like living, breathing creatures, including clumsy comic relief sidekick Jar-Jar Binks, one of the computerized aliens and a companion of Jinn.

Anyone who wasn't able to see the film on opening night may still be faced with long lines for weeks to come, because I predict that people will want to see Lucas' magic over and over

Hawaii visitor one of nature's frequent fliers

Cpl. Barry Melton

Judging from the number of vacationing tourists who visit the Hawaiian Islands each year, it would be safe to say most everyone enjoys a trip to paradise.

The Pacific Golden-Plover is no exception.

Every year, logging more frequent flier miles than most business executives, the Plover leaves the brutal Alaskan and Siberian winters behind to spend their time Plovers you see in your yard this year was probably the same group of birds that were there the year before.'

When they arrive in Hawaii, they occupy grassy areas here and feed on insects. Many of these Plovers choose MCB Hawaii, Kancohe Bay, as their winter vacation site.

They arrive to Hawaii in August wearing their drab winter coats, consisting of mostly brown plumage with dirty white leathers covering their underparts.

When the Plovers get ready to depart for their non-stop 36- to 48hour flight back north, they will circle around base to "pick up" the flock, said Bookless. One by one, the flock gets larger and larger until it is ready to depart.

The birds are one of nature's best fliers for their size, said Bookless. Most are no larger than the common pigeon and can fly in excess of 60 miles per hour. They return to the coastal tundra of Siberia and Alaska to mate. By August, they get ready to turn in Hawaii just to turn around and fly back in the summer.

"The interesting thing about these birds is they generally return to the same spot each year," said Lance Bookless, the natural recourses program manager at the MCB Hawaii Environmental Department. "Chances are, the
