Hammer Soldiers make presence in Khanassa

FOB HAMMER — Soldiers of 1st Battalion, 15th Infantry Regiment, visited the village of Kesra in southern Khanassa, Iraq, Feb. 24 to meet with local leaders.

Soldiers and leaders, including the commander of the 1-15th Inf. Regt., Lt. Col. Jack Marr, from Minneapolis, visited the village to discuss how Coalition Forces can support the area's humanitarian and security needs.

"We have only done air assault missions in the area in the past," said Maj. John Cushing, from Rochester, Mich., the 1-15 Inf. Regt. operations officer. "No one has been there for the reasons we were today. They had not seen Coalition Forces driving during the day since 2006."

Cushing said Khanassa has been a hostile area in the past.

"We were unsure of how we were going to be welcomed," he said. "But I think they were just as curious as we were."

The welcome was not what they had expected, Cushing said. Local leaders greeted the unit by coming to the front gate of Combat Outpost Carver, home to Company B, 1-15th Inf. Regt., to escort the Soldiers to their village.

"After the meeting we had with about 25 different sheiks, we did a foot patrol through the town and people followed us," Cushing said. "It was a warm welcome."

Cushing said he was impressed by the village's organization. Citizens were securing their community with guard positions without any help from Coalition Forces.

"They had a robust market," he said. "It was probably better than any market I've seen in our (area of operation). It looked like they weren't hurting for any supplies."

Despite their stability, Cushing said there are still ways to assist the village. Plans are in the works to provide the village with water.

"We will continue to work with the sheiks," Cushing said. "We want to set up the town for future relationships and improvements. This is a good example of how towns all over Iraq are starting to come together to force al-Qaeda out."

they also completed 22 projects worth more than $2 million dollars. Three projects are still in progress, worth approximately $300,000, and 24 more are awaiting approval, totaling more than $3 million dollars.

The projects run the gamut from health, electricity, water, education, communication, business development, transportation and reconstruction. The battalion worked closely with the Wasit Provincial Reconstruction Team to develop and execute the projects.

Several sheiks of the nearby villages and towns who worked with Benitez attended the ceremony among other guests. The list of guests included Brig. Gen. Edward Cardon, deputy commanding general for support, Multi-National Division - Center, and Brig. Gen. Gabriel Gabor, deputy chief of staff, Multi-National Force – Iraq.

Safety Thought of the Day

Three Points of Contact Reminders

- Dismount the vehicle using the proper steps and hand holds — never jump.
- Ensure handholds, rails, and foot rests are properly emplaced and anchored before putting weight on them.
- Keep the vehicle's steps and handholds clean, dry, and free of mud and oil. This will allow better traction and decrease the chance of slipping and falling.
- Entry and exits from the back of an LMTV are best accomplished with the use of the vehicle's cargo ladder.
- Remember — three points of contact increases your stability and balance.

Cold feet penalty; ‘dog’ buns; tourist crackdown

A price for saying ‘I don’t’

MEXICO CITY (Reuters) — Mexican brides and grooms who get cold feet before walking down the aisle will have to pay their significant other for the inconvenience, if a proposal by a local congressman is adopted.

In Mexico, weddings are big social events where large amounts of money are spent before the big day on gowns, tuxedos, catering and music bands and churches are even reserved years in advance.

Weddings of over 500, or even 1,000 guests, are frequently splashed across newspapers’ social pages. According to Mexican tradition, the bride’s family absorbs most of the expenses.

Jose Antonio Zepeda, a city deputy for President Felipe Calderon’s conservative National Action Party, wants to introduce the idea of compensation for backing out of a wedding as part of changes to the capital’s civil code.

“He or she who refuses to live up to a marriage commitment will pay for the expenses that the other party made in connection with the planned matrimony,” Zepeda’s proposal says.

Zepeda also wants lawmakers to give legal status to prenuptial agreements for those on their way to the altar in hopes it will make divorce settlements easier if the couple splits later on.

“We are looking to avoid emotional distress, cut divorce expenses and shorten the time that courts spend solving them,” Zepeda told Reuters on Friday. The prenuptial agreement will be optional.

Divorce rates are on the rise in Mexico, which has a predominantly Catholic population of over 107 million. Currently, three out of 10 couples in Mexico City divorce, compared with just one in 10 in the 1970s, the congressman said.

Zepeda’s proposal is expected to be voted by Mexico City’s congress in March or April. If passed, it will only apply to heterosexual couples in the capital, which legalized gay unions in 2006.

Bun-maker cleans up name

BEIJING (Reuters) — A Chinese maker of famed stuffed buns whose Chinese name means “A dog would ignore it” has cleaned up its English-language to avoid confusion, but may be risking more puzzled looks.

The steamed “Goubuli” buns filled with a mince of meat and vegetables are the pride of Tianjin, a gritty port city near Beijing. Their Chinese name literally means “Dog would ignore it” and is said to come from the nickname of the man who began selling them some 150 years ago. Now the buns are sold nationwide and have attracted makers of fake “Dog-would-ignore-it” buns.

But hungry for more success and apparently worried that foreign tourists may fear their name reflects the buns’ quality or contents, the Tianjin Goubuli Group Corporation has opted for a tamer English name that may bring its own confusion — “Go Believe.”

“The English name highlights the honesty of the company,” said the chairman of the corporation, Zhang Yansen, according to the Xinhua news agency on Sunday. “We hope it can be better understood and trusted by foreign guests.”

The company has started hanging out the English-language “Go Believe” sign on its restaurants, Xinhua said.

Beijing police clamp down on ‘Bird’s Nest’ tourists

BEIJING (Reuters) — Beijing has moved to crack down on drivers who park their cars illegally on a major highway to take snaps from a pedestrian bridge with good views of the major Olympic stadiums, local media reported on Sunday.

Authorities have posted traffic police on a highway overpass near the Olympic village in a bid to stop the hundreds of cars and tourist buses from pausing to take photos of the main “Bird’s Nest” National Stadium and the “Water Cube” Swimming Centre, the Beijing Youth Daily said. Offenders would have their number plates photographed by camera-toting cops, and be fined 200 yuan, the paper said, adding that signs posted two months ago to warn off motorists had not worked.

The pedestrian bridge spanning the highway had also become a haunt for hawkers doing a thriving trade in Polaroids and counterfeit Olympic merchandise, the paper said. Some vendors had even set up computers and printers to sell “10-yuan photos of people posing with the Bird’s Nest,” it said.

“Pirated Fuwa (Olympic mascots), had also taken advantage of the view, selling well, with 10 and 20-yuan keyrings proving particularly popular,” the paper said.
