On Point Army Social Media Resources

The U.S. Army uses social media as an interactive method of telling the Army story. Recently, continuing the effort to inform and educate, the Army launched a new social media microsite for social media managers, Soldiers, Families, and Army Civilians who communicate using organizational, professional and personal social media accounts. Office of the Chief of Public Affairs' Digital Media Division created the Army Social Media microsite to replace the previous 'Social Media Handbook' PDF. The new site provides policies, guidance, and recommendations to help all members of the Army family become more effective communicators.

YAKIMA TRAINING CENTER, Wash. – As the Army's number one priority, readiness means more than just the ability to spring into action for a quick fight. It also means being prepared to sustain operations in the field for as long as necessary, often in the midst of unfriendly terrain and an agile enemy.

To prepare for these rigors of sustained land combat, more than 6,000 Soldiers from 22 units across the Army and National Guard conducted Exercise Bayonet Focus 17-03, from June 15 – 29, at both the Yakima Training Center and Joint Base Lewis-McChord, Washington.

The purpose of the exercise was to prepare the 2-2 Stryker Brigade Combat Team for their upcoming National Training Center rotation at Fort Irwin, California, and was the largest exercise the 7th Infantry Division has conducted since its reactivation in 2012.

The training included force-on-force engagements using MILES gear, blank ammo and simulation ordinance. Soldiers acting as role-players in multiple roles such as civilians, detainees, and reporters, and conducted live-fire training with small arms, vehicle-mounted weapons, Apache helicopters and artillery.

"Our mission is deploy, fight and win decisively anywhere and in order to do that we have to focus on our decisive action and mission essential tasks," said Maj. Gen. Thomas James, commanding general of 7th Infantry Division.

"The culminating training event is Bayonet Focus, where we focus on the brigade combat team and of its attachments and subordinate units. We create an operational environment at Yakima Training Center that allows us to get after those mission essential tasks."
