Druggan Assumes Command of Naval Surface Warfare Center

Rear Adm. Tom Druggan relieved Rear Adm. Lorin Selby as commander, Naval Surface Warfare Center (NSWC) during a change of command ceremony, Aug. 25.

Druggan, a surface warfare officer and a native of Lexington, Ky., attended the U.S. Naval Academy, graduating with a Bachelor of Science degree in 1989. He also holds a Master of Science in national resource management from the National Defense University's Eisenhower School (formerly Industrial College of the Armed Forces) and a Master of Science degree in operations research from the Naval Postgraduate School.

"It is an honor and a personal privilege to serve as the 12th commander, Naval Surface Warfare Center," said Druggan. "The important work at NSWC is more critical and more important now than ever to meet the advanced threats and challenges emerging today."

At sea, Druggan served as aboard a variety of surface ships and commanded the AEGIS Ballistic Missile Defense destroyer, USS O'Kane (DDG 77). Ashore, he served as major program manager for AEGIS Combat Systems in the Program Executive Office for Integrated Warfare Systems. He also served as major program manager for In-Service AEGIS Fleet Readiness and previously as principal assistant program manager for In-Service Aircraft Carrier Combat System Integration, directly supporting Program Executive Office for Aircraft Carriers. Druggan's Pentagon tours include special assistant to the chief of naval operations, special assistant to the vice chief of naval operations, the 2001 Navy Quadrennial Defense Review staff, and as a founding member of the Navy operations group, Deep Blue.

Vice Adm. Thomas Moore, the 44th commander of the Naval Sea Systems Command (NAVSEA), was the guest

614th AOC Detachment One is Deactivated, 18th Space Control Squadron Detachment One Stands Up

Maj. Erin Dunagan, right, accepts the guidon of the 18th Space Control Squadron Detachment One (SPCS Det One) from Lt. Col. Scott Putnam, commander, 18th Space Control Squadron at the deactivation of the 614th Air Operations Center.

Military and civilian staff alike gathered at an auditorium aboard Naval Support Facility (NSF) Dahlgren to mark the deactivation of the 614th Air Operations Center (AOC), Detachment One and the activation and assumption of command for the 18th Space Control Squadron (SPCS) Detachment One on Aug. 26. The newly-named detachment will be led by Maj. Erin Dunagan, commanding officer of the former 614th AOC Det One.

Verrian Ireland, 18th SPCS Det One operations officer, was on hand to share the history and transition of the 614th AOC Det One, whose mission encompassed providing space command and control, as well as space situational awareness. That mission has evolved significantly over the years; it was originally a Navy-led program but transitioned to the Air Force in 2004.

"The 614th AOC Detachment One will be deactivated and the 18th Space Control Squadron, Detachment One will be activated. Major Erin Dunagan will also be assuming command of the 18th Space Control Squadron Detachment One," Ireland said.

Lt. Col. Scott Putnam, commander, 18th SPCS at Vandenberg Air Force Base, Calif. and presiding officer of the ceremony, was on hand from to welcome members of the former 614th AOC Det One into the fold.

"I think the biggest question here today is 'why are we here?'" Putnam said. "The face of the way we do space operations is changing. In the past, our primary focus in space was base situational awareness, what is going on in the domain and trying to operate safely while providing space effects to the warfighter."

Putnam explained how over the last two decades, potential adversaries have studied how the U.S. De-

Future Leaders Build Bridges on Both Sides of the Fenceline

By BARBARA WAGNER

As the Chief Petty Officer (CPO) 365 Phase II training continues, selectees from commands at Naval Support Facility (NSF) Dahlgren have engaged in long hours of training, both physical and mental, and are probably questioning their desires to be a part of the program as the challenges begin to take a toll on their fortitude. Throughout the arduous training, however, there are days when the selectees are able to take part in projects that build camaraderie, teamwork and create a lasting impact on the community.

It was on a beautiful late summer morning that NSF Dahlgren selectees met at the Caledon State Park, where they worked on several projects repairing and building much needed infrastructure.

Selectees worked on five different projects simultaneously by assisting in the construction of a kayak rack, several benches and about 70 feet of new fencing, along with some demolition assistance at the amphitheater and playground.

"The chiefs and selectees were very motivated," Chief Sonar Technician Ben Lebron, assigned to the Center for Surface Combat Systems (CSCS) said. "There is such a diverse pool of experience and everyone brought something to the table."

Lebron, other current chiefs and the rest of the 2016 CPO selectees, along with family members, converged on the park and worked throughout the day to complete the park enhancement projects. He shared that while the work was challenging, it was fulfilling and that the most rewarding part of the process was giving back to the community.

"Chief Petty Officers embrace their roles as humble leaders and servants. It's important to instill that into the each new generation of CPO Selectees. The work that we did was also a good opportunity for the families to come out and see what the process is about," Lebron said.

The bonus of the new assets at the park is that families will be able to enjoy the fruits of their labor at Caledon, which offers miles of hiking and biking trails and a canoe and kayak launch into the Potomac River. The staff at Caledon are grateful for the assistance with these larger scale projects that improve the park.

CPO selectees and current chiefs work together to construct a kayak rack at the Caledon State Park in Dahlgren Va.

"They [chiefs and selectees] provide us with the manpower to complete projects that we probably wouldn't be able to do with out them," Joey Shelton, chief ranger at the park said. "They give us the opportunity to offer more to the community and it's also really nice to get to know the spouses and children and see them out at the park."

Chief Fire Controlman Nathan Andrews is in charge of creating events and choosing projects for the selectees to participate in. Each project and event is chosen to not only build strong teams, but also to enhance leadership skills, and Andrews takes care to ensure that the selectees make an impact on and off NSF Dahlgren.

"I select the COMREL projects based on where I see I can get the most outreach into the community. National and State parks are a great place for this, as their importance to the community is great, especially in remote areas like Dahlgren," Andrews said. "I also look for projects that involve team-building and coordination, where leaders need to take charge and make sure that the project gets completed in a satisfactory and efficient manner."

The most difficult aspect for Andrews when selecting the types of projects, however, is guessing how long the projects will take and having to estimate how many selectees he will even have to complete them.

"I found that some projects, such as the split-rail fence we built at the George Washington Birthplace, took a lot less time than I projected. Once a good system and coordination was put in place, the volunteers were able to fly through the project," Andrews explained.

Not only do the selectees have the opportunity to build – both literally and figuratively – in their local community, but Andrews ensures that other events like trips to the Marine Corps Museum are a part of the curriculum. More than just a sightseeing visit, Andrews finds that the museum is useful at instilling a sense of heritage in the selectees and to witness leadership at work throughout history.

"They are able to see how leadership has evolved through past conflicts, and to understand the sacrifices that were made by our predecessors that have made our Military what it is today," Andrews said.

Selectees also take part in competitive events such as "chariot races" and other events versus other installations selectees. Those events are important in instilling a sense of pride in their unit and building teamwork as selectees work together towards victory.

"Leadership and cooperation definitely comes into play, as these events would fail if it were not for the selectees formulating a plan, and working together to achieve the end goal," Andrews said.

With two full weeks left to go, selectees will continue to build their foundations as future leaders and reaffirm their dedication to the Navy ethos and core values that they have demonstrated thus far in their Navy careers. The CPO 365 Phase II training will culminate in a pinning ceremony on Sept. 16.

Energy Manager on the Hunt for the Biggest Loser

By BARBARA WAGNER
South Potomac Pilot

Naval District Washington (NDW) will kick off its regional "Biggest Loser" energy contest on Sept. 1 and the contest will run through Oct. 31. The goal is to reduce energy consumption across the region by 5 percent and Naval Support Facility (NSF) Dahlgren and NSF Indian Head are rolling up their collective sleeves and turning off lights and monitors and taking other energy-aware steps to make a greener difference across the bases.

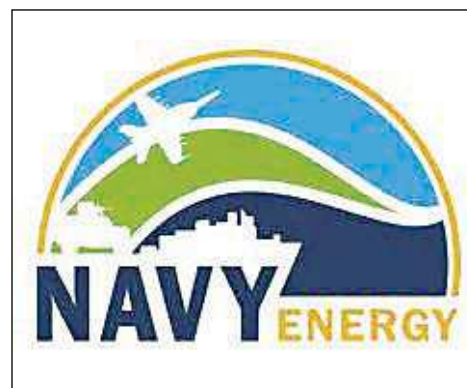

Kathryn Simpson, energy manager at Naval Support Activity South Potomac (NSASP), will use monitoring technology including AMI meters to track decreases in consumption on the base. The baseline for comparison will be energy consumption from August. Although the bases will be competing as a whole against other commands, Simpson is particularly interested in monitoring buildings that show high energy use to see if they can reduce their consumption compared to prior months.

"What the contest is about really is to start the conversation about energy conservation. The goal is to get folks to do the right thing," Simpson said. "I have always heard that anything you do for 31 days becomes a habit and the two months of the contest give us the opportunity to foster those good energy habits. These are our tax payer dollars at work and we want to be good stewards of that."

While energy usage on the base will be monitored to track savings, conservation tips that are useful at the office are easily translatable to the home.

In addition to turning off monitors and lights, changing your light bulbs can help rack up the savings. LED bulb technology now costs less than $2.00 a bulb and provides better light, lasts for 20 years and will pay for itself in the first year.

With the change in seasons not too far away, temperatures will begin to drop and homes will require heat for those chilly mornings. You can take a few steps now to ensure that the heat you are paying for isn't just slipping under the cracks in your exterior doors and windows.

Check your exterior door and window seals for cracks or gaps that might allow air to slip through. Changing out a door frame seal and adding caulking or expandable foam to a window is a pretty simple DIY job that can keep extra change in your pocket and the heating or cooling in your home.

Another step that might not initially make you think of energy savings is to vacuum your refrigerator's backside coils regularly and clean the dryer lint filter frequently. Not only do both of these improve safety by reducing the chance of fire, but these easy steps can also save energy. Be sure to give the refrigerator coils some breathing room too by leaving a little space between the wall and the unit. For bonus energy savings and as an extra safety precaution, have your dryer duct system cleaned out annually.

Back at the office, the Biggest Loser competition is a key component in the Navy's conservation initiative to reduce consumption, increase energy stability and sustainability. Watch for upcoming events and activities to help everyone be more mindful of their energy consumption and aware of the impact that their actions make on a larger scale.

Meanwhile, simple acts of turning off monitors and lights when stepping out of the office for lunch or a meeting or unplugging chargers when not in use do make a difference. As Helen Keller once said, "Alone we can do so little; together we can do so much."

Indian Head MWR Marketing Assistant Specializes in Serving Those Who Serve

By BARBARA WAGNER
South Potomac Pilot

If you have been out and about at an MWR event on Naval Support Facility (NSF) Indian Head in the last six months, chances are you have seen a new and now-familiar face. Rikia Ceasar, MWR marketing assistant brings her own brand of enthusiasm and passion for service.

Previously, Ceasar served as a Single Marine Program recreation assistant and as a human resource generalist at Headquarters and Service Battalion, Headquarters Marine Corps, at Joint Base Myer-Henderson Hall. It was at Henderson Hall that Ceasar first encountered the motto that continues to drive her performance.

"In Henderson Hall our slogan was 'Serve Those Who Serve,' and that has stuck with me," Ceasar said. "I don't think I'm brave enough to fight the good fight so to speak, but I am brave enough to support those who do and I love the opportunity to do that here at Indian Head."

Originally from Clinton, Md., Ceasar currently resides in Crofton and enjoys the four-seasons living that the state offers. She likes traveling around the state to places such as Annapolis and Baltimore, as well as catching any number of sports at the nearby stadium. Ceasar appreciates the variety of activities that are possible throughout the year. Another pastime she enjoys is spending time in nature, though sometimes she finds it difficult to squeeze that outdoor recreation time in with her busy schedule.

In addition to working to make NSF Indian Head MWR activities the best she can, she is also completing her degree in Marketing and Graphic Design with University of Maryland University College. Ceasar is enjoying the artistic projects that come with the degree and has a May 2017 graduation date in sight.

Ceasar's passion for her position is evident as she describes the best part of her job aboard NSF Indian Head — connecting with the service members and dependents who call the base home.

"My first event after I arrived was the wrestling event, followed by the Dr. Seuss's birthday event, so I have gotten to see the families come from those to the Easter event," Ceasar explained. "It's nice to see them come to the events; it's important to me to get them out of the house and get involved in the community."

Ceasar believes that her job is more than just promoting and executing the events, but to also provide a sense of community for those family members who are often alone while their service member is deployed.

"It's nice to give them that sense of community and family when they aren't able to have the one they want," Ceasar said. "I love to be able to facilitate that feeling of home and family. It's nice to know that because an event was advertised well, that they are coming out and because it was done well, they keep coming back. That's my favorite part, hands down."

Ceasar misses the connection she was able to have with the service members at Henderson Hall, because for her that is the opportunity to work directly with those who she loves to serve. While the environment is slightly different at NSF Indian Head, she is recognizing new opportunities to make a difference.

"It doesn't feel like the active duty lifestyle as much here," Ceasar said. "But if that's the worst problem I have, then I am good."

Being known as "the swag lady" might be off-putting to some, but Ceasar loves it.

"I love the fact that they look forward to seeing me because they know that something good is coming," Ceasar laughed. "It makes me super excited that they look forward to seeing me."

Ceasar has lots of ideas percolating for exciting and fun events for NSF Indian Head, including a "Turkey Bowl" coming in November where she is envisioning flag football with frozen turkeys as well as agility courses and, of course, turkey bowling at the Mix House.

Until then, she wants everyone to know that she is looking forward to working with and getting to know her NSF Indian Head family and that if you're in need of a pick-me-up, she's got a smile for you and is happy to assist.

"We're in this thing together," she said. "If you're having a bad day, come and find me and I will help put a smile on your face."

Student: Fire Controlman 3rd Class Donovan Allen Jr.
Hails from: West Warwick, R.I.
Joined the U.S. Navy: 2014
Course: AEGIS MILSPEC Fire Control System (FCS)

Why FC3 Allen Jr. was nominated: "Fire Controlman 3rd Class Allen Jr. was selected as ATRC's student of the month due to his outstanding uniform appearance, military bearing and community involvement," said Student of the Month Coordinator Fire Controlman 1st Class Ernesto Garcia.

Q and A with FC3 Allen Jr.

Why did you join the Navy?

I desired a strong foundation for my career. At this time, I am not sure if the Navy will be my life long career but I know it has already provided me the groundwork that I need to succeed in life.

Do you have any family members in the Navy?

I am the first in my family to join the Navy. My grandfather was in the Army and my uncle was in the Marines.

What are your hobbies?

I do a lot of volunteer work for the Morale, Welfare and Recreation (MWR) program. In addition, I enjoy playing paintball!

What do you enjoy most about your course?

I really enjoyed learning about the MK-84 400Hz Power Conversion System.

What is your current GPA?

At ATRC, has anyone had a positive impact on you?

My class counselor, Chief (Select) Fire Controlman Cuddeback, my old duty section leader, Fire Controlman 1st Class Matthew Derden, and my current leading petty officer (LPO), Fire Controlman 1st Class Joshua Langlois, have been great mentors. Whenever I need support, they have been there for me and my peers.

After you graduate in September, where is your next tour of duty?

I have orders to USS Anzio (CG 68).

Additional remarks?

I want to thank ATRC for the opportunities they have provided to me. Each opportunity I have seized has shaped me into the Sailor I am today.

systems in the world. NSWC cohesively and seamlessly operates a full spectrum of research, development, testing, evaluation, engineering and fleet support so that our great Navy can fulfill its mission.”

Selby has served as commander of NSWC since October 2014. He assumed additional duties as the chief engineer and deputy commander for Ship Design, Integration and Naval Engineering in June 2016.

“The men and women of the Warfare Centers have already written more than a century of history in Naval warfare with names like Commodore Crane, Ensign Dashiell, Rear Adm. Dahlgren, Rear Adm. Taylor and Rear Adm. Melville,” said Selby. “Looking toward the future, our men and women continue to make Naval history in so many facets that are absolutely critical to American military strength — weapons, propulsion, ship design, energetics. Innovation and high velocity learning has been in our DNA for decades!”

The NAVSEA Warfare Centers are comprised of NSWC and the Naval Undersea Warfare Center (NUWC) and represent approximately 30 percent of the Navy’s engineering and scientific expertise. NSWC is comprised of eight echelon-four Divisions: Carderock, Corona, Crane, Dahlgren, Indian Head Explosive Ordnance Disposal Technology, Panama City, Philadelphia, and Port Hueneme, as well as one echelon-five command, Combat Direction Systems Activity (part of Dahlgren). NUWC is comprised of two echelon-four Divisions, Newport and Keyport, as well as one echelon-five command, Naval Sea Logistics Center (part of Keyport). With more than 100 years of history, the NAVSEA Warfare Centers provide “full spectrum” technical advice and solutions to our partners in support of Naval platforms and systems.

partment of Defense (DoD) successfully provided space effects to its advantage on the battlefield and have rapidly begun to attempt to counter those measures.

“As the DoD we need to shift how we approach space and start to view it as a war-fighting domain and the ceremony today is one step in that process,” Putnam said

The process to shift responsibility began five weeks prior to the deactivation ceremony, when the 18th SPCS was stood up at Vandenberg Air Force base and officially took over the maintenance of the satellite catalog and assumed the mission of the 614th AOC.

“We welcome Erin and the men and women of Detachment One and we look forward to a future of being one team in executing the mission,” Putnam concluded.

Putnam received the retiring guidon of the 614th AOC Det One from Dunagan, who assumed command of the unit in June of 2015. Dunagan then received the new guidon of the 18th SPCS Det One and officially assumed command of the detachment.

Dunagan shared that the now-defunct 614th Det One was and will continue to be a very tight-knit community who would continue to work together.

“Sometimes people want to remain where they are and think ‘I don’t want to move and I don’t want to change.’ Change is hard but you have to keep moving forward,” Dunagan said.

Dunagan quoted the words of Martin Luther King Jr. when describing her command’s continued commitment to excellence: “If you can’t fly then run, if you can’t run then walk, if you can’t walk then crawl but whatever you do you have to keep moving forward.”

“That’s us,” Dunagan continued. “That’s the 18th Space Control Squadron Det One and we will continue to move forward with our mission as well as with our family [across the space community].”
