Army Values are never off duty

MAJ. GEN. RAYMOND V. MASON
Senior Commander, U.S. Army-Hawaii

Over the past few weeks, I have grown very concerned about the level of in-discipline on our installations and housing areas. I asked Command Sgt. Maj. George Duncan to place additional emphasis on these reports. What we have learned is that a very small element of our population is jeopardizing the quality of life and safety that the rest of the U.S. Army Hawaii team strives for, and our Soldiers and families deserve.

These in-disciplined individuals are disregarding the very Army Values that are the bedrock of our Army culture. These values – that guide us in combat and in garrison – are never off duty.

There has been an alarming increase in the level of speeding on post, playing loud music while driving through housing areas, talking on cell phones while behind the wheel, rude and offensive comments to family members, increased domestic violence, and disrespectful and undisciplined conduct of Soldiers and family members at the post exchange and around our installations.

Unfortunately, this unacceptable conduct is increasing. In March, 22 Soldiers were apprehended for driving under the influence. Of these 22 Soldiers, 45 percent ranged in rank from sergeant to major.

Community members have reported an increase in speeding throughout neighborhoods – creating safety concerns while their children are out playing. When corrections are made, the offending individuals often react in a disrespectful manner.

The delinquent conduct of juvenile family members remains a significant cause of concern and the largest source of crime on our installations. In fact, three Schofield Barracks teenagers were apprehended at 1 a.m., April 25, for breaking into vehicles and stealing property. This conduct reflects the fact that some Soldiers are not embodying the Army Values while off duty and are not holding their family members to the “Golden Rule,” treating others as one would like to be treated.

The command sergeant major and I are calling upon the entire Army Hawaii community – units, leaders, Soldiers, family members and civilians – to exemplify the Army Values on and off duty and to stem this tide of unacceptable conduct.

The plan below outlines our strategy to work together in achieving a safe and respectful community environment for everyone to enjoy. It is a collaborative approach that calls upon four critical elements to ensure every member of the Army Hawaii team lives the Army Values every day.

•Standards of Conduct

We must ensure Soldiers, family members and civilian employees know our standards of conduct. This knowledge will empower our Army Hawaii team to be vanguards of these standards.

We will re-emphasize and stress our

“It is a collaborative approach that calls upon four critical elements to ensure every member of the Army Hawaii team lives the Army Values every day.”

Maj. Gen. Raymond V. Mason
Senior Commander, U.S. Army-Hawaii

Four Critical Elements

- 1 - Army Values are the bedrock of our culture and are never "off duty."
- 2 - Leaders are responsible for the conduct of their Soldiers 24/7.
- 3 - Crime prevention and individual Soldier and family member responsibility is the best law enforcement.
- 4 - Senior leaders are charged with cultivating a culture of honor, dignity and respect across the Army Hawaii team.

standards of conduct at Soldier in-processing briefs at the garrison and unit levels, at the U.S. Army Garrison-Hawaii's Orientation for New Employees Program, and by using installation information channels.

Units should also examine their sponsorship and Soldier integration programs. An effective sponsorship program that focuses on the standards of conduct and Army Values will undoubtedly have a positive impact on our entire Army Hawaii community.

•Unit Involvement

Put simply, unit leaders must be involved in shaping and monitoring their Soldiers' conduct, 24/7. Although we remain exceptionally busy with supporting the war on terror, we must not accept relaxed standards in any environment. Relaxed standards set the tone for disciplinary and safety issues.

Noncommissioned officer (NCO) roles and responsibilities must continually be emphasized; it is the NCO presence in the workplace and community that “sets and enforces the standard” for our Soldiers while they are on and off duty.

2009 has been designated as “The Year of the NCO.” Our NCOs are valued and empowered more than in any other army in the world. Part and parcel to this is having NCOs who lead by example, enforce standards and take care of Soldiers and families.

Our NCOs are in the best position to ensure our Soldiers practice safety, are professional and respectful 24/7, and receive appropriate counseling or disciplinary action when they stray from the standard.

Leaders must hold Soldiers and family members accountable for their actions. We must never accept a Soldier's or family member's unacceptable conduct by rationalizing that it's a by-product of deployments. Deployments and other challenges will continue to strain our force; however, it is our Army Values and individual discipline that will carry our Army through these difficult times.

•Law Enforcement

Proactive community policing by the Directorate of Emergency Services (DES) is a must, but DES' involvement extends beyond patrolling and issuing tickets. I've challenged DES to develop creative solutions to reduce illegal and in-disciplined conduct.

Additionally, DES will analyze crime statistics to identify patterns, engage unit leadership for assistance in shaping Soldiers' conduct, and keep our communities informed on progress and where we need their help via the them to take greater interest in their communities and simply to be aware of their surroundings and contact the appropriate leadership and/or military police (MP) if assistance is required.

Communities can take greater interest by watching for and reporting suspicious activity, encouraging others to lock up their homes and vehicles, ensuring their own children behave accordingly, and as appropriate, making “on-the-spot corrections” – obviously done without placing themselves or their family members in any danger.

If you feel threatened, do not hesitate, call the MPs.

•Senior Leader Engagement

I know all senior leaders are committed to improving our Army Hawaii quality of life. People (Soldiers, families and civilian employees) and mission accomplishment are our focus; they're why we serve.

The strength of our Army is the rich fabric of its diversity, coupled with our culture of honor, where every member of the team deserves to be treated with absolute dignity and respect.

Unfortunately, some members of Army Hawaii are dishonoring themselves, their unit and our Army, and they're violating that most basic of Soldier trust, dignity and respect.

Our Soldiers, deployed to freedom's frontier, cannot focus on their combat mission if they're concerned about the safety of their family members back in Hawaii. We will secure our Soldiers' peace of mind by routinely assessing our progress, aggressively soliciting community feedback, and by charging all leaders with the responsibility to hold their Soldiers and family members accountable.

Our Soldiers, families and civilian employees deserve the very best quality of life. Together, we can achieve this. We can match here at home the same level of success our Soldiers and civilians are achieving in austere environments on foreign soil.

To do so, we must all become in-

Hawaii Army Weekly, TV2, the Web and community bulletins.

Lastly, DES will continue to emphasize standing up neighborhood watch groups. The goal is not to put families out on patrol, rather it is to encourage volved – enforce standards, instill in our Soldiers that Army Values are never off duty, and insist every member of the Army Hawaii family abide by the “Golden Rule.” To do any less is simply unacceptable!

Reflection, meditation more important than being busy

CHAPLAIN (CAPT.) BRIAN REED

I recently visited with a redeployed noncommissioned officer. He was a hard charging, combat veteran who had “Army Strong” written all over his face.

He was great at what he did for the Army. Give him a mission and it will get done sooner and better than his superiors would expect. “Git ‘er done” was his mantra.

However, in his personal, religious life, he was hoping he would be good enough for God someday to make it into heaven. He was seeing his relationship with God like his worthiness in every other aspect of life.

MPs, IPs work together to make Iraqi streets safe

BAGHDAD – The heat of the day is rising as military policemen of the 463rd Military Police (MP) Company, 93rd MP Battalion, 8th MP Brigade, along with their Iraqi Police (IP) counterparts, move through a market in the Amariyah neighborhood here, April 29.

They move through an intersection that looks just like the others they have encountered during the day, but this one has significance, according to Staff Sgt. Preston O'Neal, a squad leader assigned to the 463rd MP Co.

"You see this intersection here? There used to be a lot of [improvised explosive devices] at this intersection," the native of Dixon, Mo., said. "Now people let us know if they see somebody placing something."

This peaceful intersection is indicative of the security progress made in Amariyah, said O'Neal, who attributes it to the increased competence of the Iraqi Police (IP).

"One thing a lot of the people wanted to know today was the phone number to the police station, so they could call them in the future if something bad happens," he said.

Staff Sgt. Preston O'Neal (left), a squad leader assigned to 463rd Military Police (MP) Company, 93rd MP Battalion, 8th MP Brigade, hands a flier to a local in the Amariyah neighborhood, April 29.

The patrol through a market in Amariyah was not just about keeping the bad guys at bay, O'Neal explained. It was also about letting the IPs take the lead to establish a presence in the community and to be involved with the concerns of the local populace.

The IPs, along with the 463rd MPs, stopped by several shops to talk with shop owners.

"We just asked them, you know, how business is and how things are going in the community," said O'Neal. "It helps show the people that we care and that we're concerned with their well-being."

When children would walk past, the IPs would hand them gifts: boxes of colored pencils and other things, to cultivate goodwill.

"We bought some things from one of the local stores to help the economy and then let the IPs hand it out to kids," O'Neal said.

But gifts were not all that were handed out. Part of the mission involved distributing flyers against the RKG-3 antitank grenade.

"It has a picture of an RKG-3 on it, (tells) what to do if a local sees one lying around, and (shows) how to identify if somebody is carrying one around," O'Neal explained. "That way they can notify the [Iraq Security Forces] and, hopefully, we can get it before it's deployed."

At the end of the mission, the IPs and MPs travelled back to the Amariyah Station and conducted an after-action review. After discussing the strengths and weaknesses of the day's mission, the two units, differing in culture but united in purpose, parted ways.

The 463rd MPs returned to Victory Base Complex, confident that their operation had contributed to the continued security of Iraq.

Tropic Lightning bands entertain American, Iraqi troops to celebrate partnership

STAFF SGT. CLAUDIA K. BULLARD
165th Mobile Public Affairs Detachment

FORWARD OPERATING BASE DAGGER, Iraq – The 25th Infantry Division's rock and jazz bands, Sandstorm and Jazz for Joe, turned Partnership Day into a festival here, recently.

The bands played for U.S. and Iraqi Soldiers who were celebrating six years of working together to bring security and stability to Iraq.

The troops spent the day facing off in soccer matches, games of three-on-three basketball, volleyball and long-hit golf over the Tigris River.

For lunch, Soldiers sat underneath palm trees, eating barbecue and listening to Sgt. Jennifer Winston's soulful rendition of "Summertime" from the American folk opera Porgy and Bess. The setting was enough to make onlookers think they were in a small southern town in America; composer George Gershwin would have been proud.

"It's a very good feeling when a song you're singing makes someone smile, when it's that moving to them," said Winston, adding that band members work to please their audience. "It's great for us to be able to do what we love."

Partnership Day is the brainchild of Maj. Gen. Salahadeen, division commander, 4th Iraqi Army, and Military Integration Team commander Col. Gary David. They wanted to do something to honor the work their troops are doing and a celebration seemed to sum it up best.

Salahadeen said the day exemplifies the true partnership that exists between Iraqi and American forces. He and David served on opposite sides of the Persian Gulf War, and now their troops are co-located at Forward Operating Base Dagger in northern Iraq.

"It's truly one team and that's our goal," said Salahadeen. "We don't have two separate headquarters. We meet together in each other's gyms, eat together in each other's chow halls, play sports together and go out on missions together. That's how it is everyday."

David agreed. "We have our business side, of course, but we have our personal side as well."

Later, as Sandstorm began warming up, whatever dividing lines were left disappeared, and Soldiers from the two countries gathered in close. Sgt. Ben Hoshko belted out "Play That Funky Music," and when the son of an Iraqi interpreter joined him on stage, Hoshko picked him up and kept on going. The audience jumped up and clapped their hands to the beat.

Sgt. Donald Scales, on keyboard, said he started out the session just doing his usual performance, but as he saw the crowd get into the music, he had a change of heart.

"When I saw everyone clapping, I thought, given the history of this country, this is really cool!"

He continued, "I think not only are we are having a positive impact on the Iraqis, but they're having a positive impact on us. And then, when the kid got up there ... that was it for me."

71st Chemical Company acquires, trains on new equipment

SCHOFIELD BARRACKS – Pvt. Craig is the newest member of the 71st Chemical Company. However, Craig isn't a person, or an animal, nor is he capable of breathing – but boy, can he can move.

Pvt. Craig is a Chemical Biological Radiological and Nuclear (CBRN) Unmanned Ground Reconnaissance Vehicle (CUGV) robot – a new piece of equipment at the 71st Chemical Company, 45th Sustainment Brigade.

Soldiers of the company conducted training on the equipment April 27-May 1 to learn how to operate the two-part system, which consists of the robot and a control box.

"The ultimate goal of the system is to take the warfighter out of harm's way," said Mark Disbrow, a CBRN program engineer with Concurrent Technologies Corporation and one of the CUGV trainers.

The robot, which is waterproof and able to move up and down stairs, can function up to 850 meters away from the main control unit and is able to test for hazardous materials such as chemical warfare agents, chlorine, low oxygen levels, and radiological contamination.

One of the biggest challenges for Soldiers is learning to move the robot by Soldiers from the 71st Chemical, 45th Sustainment Brigade, look on as Pvt. Craig, a Chemical Biological Radiological and Nuclear (CBRN) Unmanned Ground Reconnaissance Vehicle (CUGV) robot, is moved using a control panel. In addition to simply moving the CUGV, Soldiers draw a map of what they see in the room based on the monitor images recorded by the robot. The level of hazardous materials detected is also recorded by the Soldiers relying solely on the monitor, which displays the CUGV's four different cameras.

The Soldiers agreed that moving the robot was the most difficult part of the training.

"You know what you need the robot to do, but getting there is the hardest part," said Staff Sgt. Travis Johnson, a platoon sergeant with 71st Chemical Co.

Soldiers also learned how to pick up various objects with the arm, another important aspect of using the CUGV.

"They are called 'snatch and grabs' in the [Chemical Biological Radiological Nuclear and Explosives] field," said Disbrow. "If you see an object that may have intelligence value, the robot can pick it up."

The final phase of training consisted of moving the robot inside and throughout an unseen building, and then testing the air at low, medium and high altitudes due to different levels of chemical dispersion.

If performed properly, Soldiers then led the robot to a make-shift "chemical laboratory," set up by the trainers. The "laboratories" emitted chemicals, such as acetone, for the Soldiers to find.

"The last phase of training helps the Soldiers understand how to put everything [they learned] together," said Disbrow.

"I think [using the CUGV] is better," said 1st Lt. Pearle Surface, a platoon leader with 71st Chemical. "If there's a dangerous situation, it prevents us from being at risk for a casualty."

The addition of Pvt. Craig is especially important for the 71st, as it has recently formed an Active Response CBRN (ARC) Team.

The nine-Soldier team is deployable within U.S. Army-Pacific and can augment local authorities for hazardous material missions, said 1st Sgt. Thomas Hendon, 71st Chemical Co.

Pvt. Craig is scheduled to be promoted to private second class after the training is completed.

45th Soldiers share capabilities with Singapore army visitors

SPC. JENNIFER PREMIER

SCHOFIELD BARRACKS – Members of the Singapore army visited Soldiers of the 71st Chemical Company, 45th Sustainment Brigade, April 28, here, to see equipment capabilities.

A five-Soldier team from Singapore spent the day viewing a decontamination training demonstration of the M903A1 Fox vehicles and sat in on Chemical Biological Radiological and Nuclear (CBRN) Unmanned Ground Reconnaissance Vehicle (CUGV) robot training.

The CUGV is a new piece of equipment for the 71st. Both pieces of equipment are designed to keep Soldiers safe while testing a given area for hazardous materials.

While the CUGV equipment may be new for Soldiers of the 71st, the Singapore army owns and operates the equipment already, using it for explosive ordnance detonation capabilities. U.S. Soldiers use the CUGV for hazardous material sensing missions.

"This is a chance for [the Singapore soldiers] to see a piece of equipment they're familiar with used in a different role in our country," said Lt. Col. John Riley, the Chemical Radiological Biological Nuclear and Explosives Division chief with U.S. Army-Pacific (USARPAC).

The exchange of information was another benefit of the visit.

"The most important aspect (of the Singapore army's visit) is the opportunity for (USARPAC) to learn the capabilities they have, and we have a lot we can share with them as well," said Riley. "As a regional partner, we should know about Singapore's capabilities."

In addition to the demonstration, Soldiers of the 71st explained the capabilities of the "Fox" and gave the Singapore soldiers a chance to ride in the machine.

The troops from Singapore were as excited about the chance to view the decontamination training of the "Fox" as the Soldiers who conducted the demonstration.

"I thought (the decontamination demonstration) was great," said Col. Heok Chye Lee, commander of the Chemical Biological Radiological Nuclear and Explosive Defense Group in the Singapore army.

Pfc. Justin Bolek (Left), a chemical operations specialist with the 71st Chemical Company, answers questions from a Soldier in the Singapore Army during an M903A1 Fox vehicle demonstration. During the visit, Singapore Soldiers learned about the vehicle and rode in them as well.

Although the Fox vehicle is too big for their terrain, Lee said his army is interested in acquiring something similar for Singapore's use.

"It was an honor for them to ask (the 71st) to be a part of this," said 1st Sgt. Thomas Hendon, 71st Chemical Co.

Currently, plans are in the works for a continuing relationship between the armies. Singapore has invited USARPAC Soldiers to Taiwan in December for an international CBRN conference, and members of the Singapore army have plans to come back to Hawaii in August to participate in an explosive ordnance disposal training exercise.

"This is the first time we have worked with USARPAC, and we have a long way to go. We can't bring everything here, so it would be nice for U.S. Soldiers to visit us as well," said Lee. "We always look forward to professional exchanges."

94th AAMDC competition weeds out top NCO, Soldier of Year

Three-day event filled with gruelling Soldier tasks to find best of best

SCHOFIELD BARRACKS – The 94th Army Air and Missile Defense Command (AAMDC), based out of Fort Shafter, conducted a Noncommissioned Officer (NCO) and Soldier of the Year competition here, April 26-29, to determine who among the ranks deserved to be recognized as the best and as the most qualified to represent the command in further competitions.

Sgt. Raymundo De Los Santos, combat medic, Headquarters and Headquarters Battery, 1st Battalion, 1st Air Defense Artillery (ADA) Regiment, and Spc. Jason A. Soberon, intelligence analyst, 94th AAMDC, prevailed over their peers during the grueling three-day competition and were recognized as the NCO and Soldier of the Year for the 94th AAMDC.

The competition included 11 participants from the 94th AAMDC, 5th competed, and that in itself shows that you are above the average Soldier and above the average NCO," said Soberon.

"You get a great sense of pride out of participating in the competition, especially if you win, knowing that you are among the best in your unit."

The participants were chosen to compete based on their board performances in the months prior to the competition. Most of them had won NCO or Soldier of the Quarter, which qualified them to participate.

"I felt my purpose for competing was to set a good example. I wanted to prove that we can go above and beyond what is asked of us and still be able to perform all of our duties," said De Los Santos. "I also wanted to represent my unit and my section."

The competitors participated in several events during the competition and received points in each event based on how well they performed. The graded events included an Army physical fitness (PT) test, day and night land navigation, a written exam and essay, weapons qualification, warrior task training, a mystery event, and the board.

"The most challenging part of the competition was the mental part, telling yourself to keep going on and pushing yourself to do it all, especially when you're tired," said De Los Santos.

The main intent of the competition was not only to name the NCO/Soldier of the Year for the 94th AAMDC but also to prepare the Soldiers for the U.S. Army- Pacific (USARPAC) and Department of the Army (DA) competitions, said Sgt 1st Class Michael Herbst, noncommissioned officer in charge of the competition, 94th AAMDC.

"While planning the competition, our main objectives were to ensure that what we did ... mirrors, plus some, with the USARPAC competition and DA level competition, because we have full intention that our Soldiers from the 94th will make it all the way to the DA level competition," said Herbst.

The winners received the Army Commendation Medal, a coin, a $500 cash prize, and a plaque.

"I feel a great sense of accomplishment for winning the competition; I also look forward to competing in the USARPAC competition in June," said Soberon. "I hope to make my unit proud by winning the competition and going on to the Department of the Army competition in September."

Soldiers are not authorized to requisition, issue or use ACH pads from sources other than DLA. Authorized pads may be obtained by submitting a properly funded requisition through normal Army supply systems.

Footsteps: Priorities help create a purpose our being." God created us human beings – not human doings or human knowings.

The Army has a three-fold approach to leadership: be, know, do, according to Field Manual 6-22 or FM 22-100.

We do great at recognizing competency (know) and measuring execution (do), but it is hard to measure being.

The Army Values take a stab at understanding our being; however, we have a tendency to memorize the LDRSHIP acronym and move out. We have made a god out of being busy (do) and don't know how to be still (be).

Being busy is measurable by others looking at us, which elevates our ego. Being still and worshipping God is godly, but it is not measurable by us. Therefore, many don't hang as much value on being.

I recently heard a man who has no arms or legs. He'd learned to not blame God for his life situation. In fact, he was thanking God that, with his physical limitations, he was able to concentrate on his spiritual assets. As a result, this man understood being and was not letting it limit his doing. However, what he chose to do was influenced by who he was and ... whose he was.

This man used this acronym for BUSY: being under satan's yoke.

Some people spend so much time doing they have no time to reflect on who they are. That is wrong. You cannot prioritize your life if you are just doing without direction.

It is like the spaceship run by idiots: "We don't know where we are going, but we are making good time." That is being busy without a purpose.

Do these things describe you? Stop and evaluate what you have become. Do you like what you see? Take steps to let go of things that are unnecessary in your life and your job, and set some priorities for what it is you want to be.

Begin to pray, reflect, meditate. I like the Army's old music jingle and slogan, "Be all that you can be." Pretty tough to be all you can be if all you are is a doing machine. Realize you are a human being and do a little less.

Spend time thinking about who you are. It will make your hours of doing more productive and fulfilling.

Hawaii’s JROTC Cadets honored by governor at Fort Shafter

Recognition makes the hard work worth it for student leadership

SGT. 1ST CLASS JASON SHEPHERD

FORT SHAFTER — Approximately 800 Junior Reserve Officer Training Corps (JROTC) cadets from 26 high schools were honored during the 27th Annual Governor’s JROTC Review and Awards Ceremony on historic Palm Circle, here, April 30.

Top cadets from each high school earned the JROTC Kina’ole Award from Hawaii Lt. Governor James R. “Duke” Aiona Jr. and were congratulated by the ceremony’s host, Lt. Gen. Benjamin R. Mixon, commanding general, U.S. Army-Pacific (USARPAC).

“This is a tremendous privilege for me to be a part of the Kina’ole Award ceremony, which recognizes and honors the achievements of these outstanding cadets who I would describe as the best of the best,” Aiona said. “I would like to take the time to acknowledge and thank all of you who are part of (JROTC). You have not only provided these young men and women with one of the best character and leadership programs in Hawaii, but you have modeled through your words and actions the essence of what I call principled leadership.”

According to Title 10, Section 2031 of the U.S. Code, the purpose of JROTC is “to instill in students in United States secondary educational institutions the values of citizenship, service to the United States, and personal responsi-world, Junior ROTC is a great place to become ingrained with the qualities that lead to success, teamwork, discipline and service. “We want to have good, dedicated citizens, and that is certainly what this program typifies and instills from the various members of the cadre who are involved in the development of these great, young Americans,” Mixon concluded. According to the Kina’ole Foundation, “the concept of Kina’ole can be best described as ‘flawlessness,’ and this award as befitting one who has done the right thing, in the right way, at the right time, in the right place, to the right person, for the right reason, with the right feeling, the first time.” “I think the biggest thing I learned during JROTC was how important communication is,” said Cadet Lt. Col. Mikael Torres, senior at Waipahu High School. “It’s most definitely something I will use when I graduate.” “I know how much JROTC has meant to him over the last four years, and this is quite an accomplishment,” said Mikael’s mother, Staff Sgt. Jean Torres, USARPAC. “I am so proud of him.” Also, during the ceremony, each high school had a chance to demonstrate its drill and ceremony skills during a “pass in review” in honor of their distinguished guests. While marching to the music of the Pacific Fleet Band, units were judged by members of the Sergeant Audie Murphy Club to determine the best marching unit. Command Sgt. Maj. George Duncan, command sergeant major, 8th Theater Sustainment Command, presented Campbell High School with the Best Marching Unit trophy. Kalaheo and McKinley high schools rounded out the top three. “The best part of this ceremony was meeting the general and the lieutenant governor,” said Cadet Lt. Col. Trey Livingston, senior at Konawaena High School. “I think this award is a great accomplishment because I worked hard for the last four years, and this proves that it was worth it.”

complete a baccalaureate degree and are commissioned as an Army officer upon receiving their degree. For many Soldiers, leaving the Army to finish their education is not an option. Losing pay and benefits are among their top concerns. The ADO meets these concerns as Soldiers continue to receive their current pay and allowances while in the program. “This program was the best fit for me,” said Fulgencio. The Green to Gold program allows cadets a chance to understand and develop their leadership style in practical and real-world terms, according to Lt. Col. Rod Laszlo, professor of Military Science, Army ROTC. “It is an extremely competitive program,” said Laszlo. “Over 400 Soldiers apply for 200 slots yearly, so having above a 3.0 GPA in college, a score of 270+ on the Army physical fitness test and excelling in leader activities are all important in the process of selection.” Laszlo stated the program gives Soldiers an education that will help them succeed in the Army. For Cadet Sgt. Stanley Tochiki, the education he received in and out of the classroom was equally important. “There are several opportunities for cadets to learn and refine their leadership skills, which include positions ranging from squad leader to company commander,” said Tochiki, “so we learn a broad spectrum.” Tochiki, a student at Hawaii Pacific University, will graduate May 13 with a Bachelor of Science degree in diplomacy and military studies.

Left — Cadet Lynette Yi shouts orders during a patrol lane. “I am currently serving as the Battalion S1,” said Tochiki, “so right now I am getting to do exactly what I will be doing when I get to my first unit.” Tochiki will receive his commission on May 17 and serve as a second lieutenant in the Adjutant General Corps. Currently, eight Soldiers in Hawaii will graduate this year and begin their careers as officers. “Many are surprised by the challenges (of the Green to Gold program) but all have risen to the challenge and generally excelled in the program,” said Laszlo. Fulgencio is looking forward to the challenges and experiences as an officer in the U.S. Army. “I hope to gain more knowledge and leadership experience needed for me to be more confident in making the difference in the welfare of Soldiers,” said Fulgencio.

HMAM: Military's accomplishments appreciated

"As a governor, there's no greater privilege than to be able to work with our armed forces," she said. "I appreciate every opportunity I have to express my gratitude to the service men and women on behalf of the people of Hawaii."

Lingle reflected on the evening's festivities with a look back at the accomplishments of service members of the past who have served the country.

This year marks the 50th anniversary of Hawaii's statehood, Lingle said, adding, "It's significant that we are gathered here before the enduring symbol of bravery, the USS battleship Missouri, as a reminder of how Hawaii and the military's history are intertwined."

The Missouri fought in battles from World War II to the 1991 Gulf War in missions carried out by uniformed men and women of the armed forces.

"All of you here are perpetuating their tradition as guardians of the military legacy for America, and Hawaii is honored to serve as a gathering place for troops from across the Pacific and the United States," Lingle said.

"Being here and taking the time to come here is insignificant compared to what the men and women of the American military do for the people of Hawaii, America, and the entire world," she continued. "You uphold our way of life and bring stability to troubled parts of the world and give hope to people who are hopeless. ... You contribute to who we are as a state and as a nation."

During the ceremony, Lt. Gen. Douglas M. Fraser, deputy commander, U.S. Pacific Command, took the stage to thank those attending the ceremony.

"My wife and I first experienced the aloha spirit when stationed here 10 years ago," Fraser said. "We fondly remember Military Appreciation Month from that time.

"Upon returning to Hawaii, we found one thing changed – the United States is engaged in two wars that directly impact military communities," he said. "One thing that hasn't changed is Hawaii's aloha spirit.

Fraser added, "This spirit has only grown stronger through the years, and I have to say, no matter where our men and women are deployed around the world, it's always good to come back to Hawaii and the aloha spirit."

central team," said Calvin Acosta, maintenance mechanic supervisor, DPW, who accepted the award for the team. "We were just the key players ... they deserve recognition for the work they did to help us get this award."

Never mind that the team was responsible for repairing and renovating facilities so the 25th Infantry Division could meet its mission or that the team responded quickly to repair flood damage done during the last December's storm.

True to DPW form, David Mesiona, maintenance mechanic leader, DPW, who was named Employee of the Year-Trades and Crafts, also recognized his team as the driving force behind being named Employee of the Year.

"Really the guys did all the work and earned the award ... all I did was give them a little guidance and direction," Mesiona said.

He joked that he wouldn't mind half of the $7.2 million he saved the garrison by finishing a 12-month project of preventative maintenance repairs to 5,217 barracks rooms and six dining facilities, in six months.

Other awardees cited their desire for service as their motivation.

The awardee for Exceptional Community Service was one such person.

"I am thankful for the honor, but I would do the service I do whether or not I am recognized," said Catherine Henderson, housing specialist, Residential Communities Initiative Housing Division, Housing Services Offices, DPW. "I love to do it because I know I'm making a difference in other people's lives. I love seeing the faces of gratitude in the people I help."

John Beatty, engineering technician, DPW, who was named Employee of the Year-Professional, Administrative and Technical, IMCOM-Pacific, ensured that the Army's mission is funded by getting the right information to the right people at the right time. He said, "What is really important to me as a retired Soldier is that I am helping improve the lives of Soldiers currently serving in the Army."

Awardees

- Employer of Choice: U.S. Army Installation Management Command, Pacific Region
- Leader of the Year: Gregory Kuhr
- Mentor of the Year: Alan Goo, deputy director, Directorate of Public Works (DPW)
- Supervisor/Manager of the Year: Rod Oshiro, engineering division chief, DPW
- Team Excellence: Individual Job Order Team, DPW (Calvin Acosta, Wendell Akagi, John Barros, Reynante Ben, Terry Dacosta, Dennis Kaio, Stephen Maloy, Vic Pereira, Edward Rick, Kevin Rost, Lydia Sato, Roland Thompson, Gerald Wade, and Art Yamilao)
- Employee of the Year-Trades and Crafts: David Mesiona, maintenance mechanic leader, DPW
- Employee of the Year-Professional, Administrative and Technical: John Beatty, engineering technician, DPW
- Employee of the Year-Clerical and Assistant: Rosemarie Jimenez, administrative specialist, DPW
- Exceptional Community Service: Catherine Henderson, housing specialist, Residential Communities Initiative Housing Division, Housing Services Offices, DPW

As a "servant leader," Alan Goo, deputy director, DPW, was proud to be named Mentor of the Year, IMCOM-Pacific. He is a respected mentor and coach dedicated to "growing leaders" and "building the bench":

He said he loves "moving folks towards excellence."

Rosemarie Jimenez, administrative specialist, DPW, Employee of the Year-Clerical and Assistant, IMCOM-Pacific, loves the family of DPW, says what drives her toward excellence is the diversity of tasks and challenges she faces every day.

"Every day is different; every day brings a different challenge," Jimenez said.

"On behalf of everyone within the garrison, I want to congratulate the awardees on the individual as well as team efforts," said Col. Matthew Margotta, commander, U.S. Army Garrison-Hawaii. "These people represent the very best of the garrison. These are employees with a focus on taking care of people and the customer and who believe excellence is the standard they should strive for.

"Congratulations on a job well done," Margotta said.

IMCOM-Pacific, the garrison's higher headquarters, was named an Employer of Choice by the FEB due in large part to improved communication with its employees through quarterly town hall meetings, shared Web site folders, and a blog site to dialogue with the director.

IMCOM-Pacific has also made workforce development and training the clear priority for the entire organization.

Named as Leader of the Year, IMCOM-Pacific's chief of staff, Gregory Kuhr, suggested the people who need to be honored are his employees.

"I serve as chief of staff, but it is really the 120 employees who perform excellent work all year-round who deserve this award," Kuhr said. "I am humbled to be the chief of staff to all these great employees."

Gallery: Heroes' legacy will live on at Fort DeRussy

Family members of the inductees unveiled display plaques of their loved ones during the ceremony. The plaques highlighted the Soldiers' stories of courage and bravery. The awards they received for their actions will be exhibited in the Gallery.

"In every case, these warriors disregarded their own personal welfare to secure the safety of their comrades and ensure the success of the mission," said Maj. Gen. Raymond V. Mason, commander, 8th Theater Sustainment Command, and guest speaker for the ceremony. "They put that fear behind them and truly went above and beyond the call of duty giving the last full measure."

The Gallery of Heroes was conceived in 1980 by retired U.S. Army Maj. Gen. Herbert E. Wolff. His vision was to create a place for honoring Hawaii's citizens who served the nation valiantly.

The Gallery's focus is to recognize the recipients of the nation's two highest awards of valor, the Medal of Honor and the Distinguished Service Cross, or their equivalents, the Navy Cross and the Air Force Cross.

Victoria Olson, executive director of the Gallery of Heroes, said the hardest part is finding the family members of the inductees.

"It is hard to find the families or the next of kin because, in a lot of cases, the families have changed names or their relatives have passed," she said.

Olson said family members of some of the inductees called after an article with the names of the inductees appeared in a local state newspaper.

"One of the inductee's (Factora) sons (Patrick Viela) saw his father's name in the paper," Olsen said. "He came in (the museum), Tuesday, with tears in his eyes."

"I got goose bumps and watery eyes," Viela said. "I go to his grave at Punchbowl a lot. I always talk to him and pray to him. He is my dad and I love him."

Keiki learn bike safety

SCHOFIELD BARRACKS — Brody Christensen, 11, adjusted his helmet and climbed on his bicycle studying the obstacle course in front of him. With a picture of a tricycle emblazoned on his blue T-shirt and the words, "chicks dig my ride" written underneath, Christensen was ready for the bike rodeo.

Bicyclists of all ages gathered at the Porter Community Center, Saturday, for an opportunity to test their abilities through an array of obstacle courses and learn about safe cycling.

Christensen maneuvered through the orange cones with ease and rested his bike at the end of the course.

"I ride my bike a lot, so this course wasn't too hard," said Christensen. "But, I still have a lot to learn about bikes and bike safety."

The participants started off the day by registering their bicycles with the Military Police (MP).

"It's important to register your property to ensure a safe return if we retrieve the lost or stolen item," said Miles Sharrock, deputy provost marshal, Schofield Barracks.

Soldiers from the 13th MP Battalion performed a safety check on all bicycles and accompanying gear, adjusting petals, airing tires and properly fitting helmets.

Riding techniques and responsibilities, including the proper way to cross an intersection and riding with traffic, were also offered.

"This gives the children a sense of responsibility," said Sgt. Jessed Kurtz, 19th MP Bn. "They learn about safety and hopefully will spread what they have learned to other kids in the neighborhood."

Obstacle courses were set up to test agility and balance. Keiki rode their bikes through the obstacles, narrowly missing orange cones to complete the course. After completion, McGruff, the Crime Dog, engages children in a sing-along at the bike rodeo, Saturday. McGruff sang songs of safety from his latest album and taught kids the importance of living a drug-free lifestyle.

each child received a ribbon of achievement.

"Bike riding is new to him," said family member Josephine Maltzberger of son Aidan, 3. "He is learning basic rules today and can look up to authoritative figures for help."

"He's learning a lot at an age where it will sink in and stick with him," added Maltzberger.

The Federal Fire Department, Honolulu Police Department, and members of the Drug Abuse Resistance Education (D.A.R.E.) program were also on hand to quiz young riders on the rules of the road and safety.

Courtney East spun the "wheel of safety" stopping on the question "Who do you call in case of an emergency?"

The 10-year-old wrinkled her forehead and promptly answered, "Dial 9 11."

A round of applause surrounded East as she was awarded a prize for the correct answer.

"It's important for young kids to be exposed to safety precautions and have a basic understanding of how to handle situations," said Sharrock. "Learning how to keep out of harm's way now will aid them in the future."

"If we do even one thing today to keep a child safe, then it is all worthwhile," said Sharrock.

Other games, including a three-legged race and an inflatable bounce house, kept family members entertained throughout the day.

A special appearance by McGruff, the Crime Dog, was a crowd favorite. Little ones danced along as McGruff sang songs of safety, including his most popular tune, "Don't do Drugs."

"I've been waiting all day to see him," whispered 4-year-old Madison Wong.

The Directorate of Emergency Services and the 13th MP Bn. supported the bike rodeo.

Military spouses share their stories of strength and service

MOLLY HAYDEN

Staff Writer

SCHOFIELD BARRACKS – Today is a day for appreciation. Today we reflect on the heroes that dedicate their lives to the well-being of Soldiers and our nation.

These heroes are our military spouses.

"I think the job of an Army spouse is one that is not easily understood in our society," said family member Amy Schardt, who participates in the family readiness group, or FRG, at B Company, 1st Battalion, 14th Infantry Regiment. "The Army lifestyle definitely forces you to grow up ... but with all this responsibility comes great reward and opportunity."

As an Army wife, Schardt has shared life's greatest joys, disappointments and sorrows with complete strangers. She has explored numerous parts of the country and world, and she has developed strong bonds and lifelong friendships.

Schardt feels pride for our brave Soldiers, strong families and nation.

"Feelings like that cannot be obtained without sacrifice and challenge," said Schardt. "Standing in that room among that group of family members who endured the same struggles is what makes me proud to call myself an Army wife."

Living the life as an Army wife can be bittersweet, according to family member Michelle Bogus, whose husband, Chris, is a Soldier with the 2nd Stryker Brigade Combat Team.

"You marry the man and take on his duties, but in reality you have married the Soldier and the military is now your life," said Bogus.

She went on to account the many struggles military families face day-to-day, including, "long days and sleepless nights, the uncertainty of what your future may hold, deployments, moving, settling, friends who come and go, and starting all over again."

It is a struggle, but Bogus and her children face these challenges head-on with open hearts and open minds.

FFD and Baskin-Robbins support National Junior Firefighter Program

U.S. ARMY GARRISON-HAWAII
News Release

SCHOFIELD BARRACKS – The Federal Fire Department (FFD) partnered with Baskin-Robbins Corporation, at the main post exchange, here, in support of the National Volunteer Fire Council (NVFC) National Junior Firefighter Program, April 29.

Firefighters helped serve ice cream at 31 cents a scoop, and in turn Baskin-Robbins donated $100,000 towards the junior firefighter program.

More than 2,000 people turned out to see the fire truck displays and meet Sparky the Fire Dog. As an added treat, recording artist and firefighter, Kalani Whitford, entertained the crowd.

The event was a success for both customers and the community.

“We served about 1,300 scoops of ice cream tonight,” said Lori Maggard, Army and Air Force Exchange Service (AAFES) food court manager. “With ice cream offered at 31 cents a scoop

During the event, community members were given an opportunity to learn valuable fire prevention information.

“Most fires start at home,” said Angela Sanders, an inspector with the FFD and an FFD program coordinator.

Senior leaders salute military spouses

Senior leaders reflect on sacrifices, support of military spouses throughout history

THE HONORABLE PETER GEREN
Secretary of the Army

GEN. GEORGE CASEY
Chief of Staff of the Army

SGT. MAJ. KENNETH PRESTON
Sergeant Major of the Army

In the 19th century, the Army protected settlers moving west. Army spouses braved the journey and life on the frontier to be with their Soldiers.

When relocating, they rode ox or horse-drawn carts and wagons and, sometimes, even walked. They confronted harsh climate, disease, and attack while coping with military life.

While times have changed, today’s Army spouses still confront many challenges.

In the 21st Century the Army has a global presence in eighty countries. Today, Army spouses confront multiple deployments, relocations, and separations while gracefully coping with military life.

In 2007 the Army instituted the Army Family Covenant and the Army Community Covenant, in part to recognize the commitment and increasing sacrifices that our families make every day and to acknowledge that the strength of our Soldiers comes from the strength of their families.

Our spouses are community leaders, careerists, mothers, fathers, and Soldiers. Our spouses routinely put the welfare of their Soldier, family, and nation above their own.

After almost eight years at war and multiple deployments, our active, reserve, and national guard spouses continue to support America’s Army unconditionally.

In 2009 the Army continues to be humbled by your sacrifices and remain committed to providing you the quality of life commensurate with your service.

Also, as we celebrate “the year of the non-commissioned officer,” (NCO) in 2009, we are reminded that the NCO Corps is the backbone of the American Army, just as our spouses are the backbone of the American Army family.

Today, May 8, Military Spouse Appreciation Day, we salute you.

Army families, Army strong!

Spouses: Military families face unique challenges with strength with family activities, school and sports programs, fundraising, family readiness group functions, and numerous community service projects.

“The countless support we receive from family and friends, other military families and the community helps to alleviate some of our families’ day-to-day stress,” said Bogus. “Words cannot express the gratitude we have for them.”

The numerous benefits received as an Army spouse is the bright side family member Mary Cook holds on to.

Between the Blue Star Card, shopping privileges, health care, exotic travel and hobnobbing with higher officials, Cook believes she is being taken care of.

“Soldiers and families certainly pay for these (benefits) through all of their sacrifices, but I think we still get a pretty good deal,” said Cook, the wife of the command sergeant major at 2nd Squadron, 14th Cavalry Regiment. “Sometimes folks just need a little perspective, especially with the economy the way it is these days.”

Since 1984, the Armed Forces have set aside a special day to acknowledge the significant contributions of Army spouses. This year, May 8 has been designated Military Spouse Appreciation Day.

The life of a military family is one of unique challenges. Spouses continue to meet these challenges with grace and strength.

“I have found this life to be a humbling experience, and I have taken solace within my family,” said Bogus. “It has taught me to appreciate the selfless and self-sacrificing life of the Soldier.”

Michelle Bogus, Army spouse

She continued, “As my husband took an oath to serve, defend and protect the United States of America and her people, so have we, the families of the Soldier. We proudly stand in support of all that he stands for and all that he does.

“Our Soldier is a vital part of our family and our nation,” Bogus added. “It is our honor, privilege and duty to serve alongside of him.”

Bunco rolls ‘big time’ at the Tropics during Family Fun Fridays

Final ultimate Bunco tournament is May 15

Story and Photos by
MOLLY HAYDEN
Staff Writer

SCHOFIELD BARRACKS – More than 50 Soldiers and family members were ready to roll the dice as they gathered at the Tropics, here, for an exciting game of “Bunco.”

Family member Criztina Jean sat at a table for four holding three dice in her hand. After casually shaking the dice, she let them roll across the table.

Frowning slightly with no points to document, Jean passed the dice to opposing player Elizabeth Terry.

The game of Bunco has been popping up at Army installations all over and continues to grow in popularity.

Jean holds weekly games in her home on Schofield Barracks.

“Spouses are always getting together for various games and book clubs,” said Jean. “Bunco is another way to come together, talk and have a little

As it is played today, Bunco is a social dice game involving luck and no skill.

The object of the game is to accumulate points by rolling certain combinations of a target number.

A turn consists of rolling three dice aiming to obtain the target number. Players earn one point for each target number rolled. If the player gets three-of-a-kind, or a Bunco, he or she earns 21 points. The round stops when a player at the head table obtains 21 points.

The game continues for six rounds. Whoever wins the most rounds is the overall winner of the game and receives a token prize.

Shouts and cheers rang from the team tables as players continued to build points with the hopes of moving into the number one spot.

Family member Melody Martel yelled, “Bunco” indicating she had rolled three-of-a-kind of the target number and a large pink fuzzy die flew through the air in her direction. Martel caught the stuffed die and laid it next to her, only to give it up a few moments later to another lucky roller.

“The die is sort of like a trophy,” said McKenna Elder, recreation specialist, Family and Morale, Welfare and Recreation. “It shows who is the last to roll a Bunco, which isn’t easy to get.”

“It’s a fun game,” continued Elder. “Everyone is constantly moving tables and playing with and against different people. It’s a great way to meet new people and interact with ones you already know.”

The last ultimate Bunco tournament will be held during Family Fun Fridays, May 15, 6 p.m., at the Tropics. Visit www.mwrarmyhawaii.com or call 655-5698.

The game continued for several hours and participants took home prizes, including T-shirts, Bunco bags and stickers.

“Even if you don’t know what you’re doing, you’ll have fun playing,” said Jean.
