300th MPs mentor district Iraqi police

Multinational Division-Baghdad Public Affairs

BAGHDAD — The Adamiyah District Iraqi Police (IP) Station, here, has the task of overseeing six IP stations in its district.

In a combat zone, oversight can be a daunting job, but the Soldiers of the 300th Military Police (MP) Company, 91st MP Battalion, 8th MP Brigade, are here to lend a helping hand.

The 300th MPs have worked with these IPs for the last 12 months, earning the trust of their Iraqi counterparts, said Sgt. Jordan Talbert, a police transition team leader, 300th MP Co.

When the MPs make a suggestion, as little as it might be, the IPs listen.

"It's little things, like wearing their uniform on duty and tucking it in. Also, having the proper weapon and ammo and wearing the proper [personal protective equipment] while on patrol," said Talbert, as a fellow MP pointed at an IP walking by and told him to tuck in his powder-blue IP shirt.

The practical methods the MPs are teaching the policemen are being filtered down to six other lower echelon stations.

"They [the IPs] are getting a lot better at helping each other out," said Cpl. Brian Shipway, an MP team leader, 300th MP Co. "Instead of just 'me, me, me,' you can see the IPs teaching each other at the stations."

To facilitate the training, the MPs suggest different, more efficient ways of doing things to the district-level IPs, such as tracking gasoline and ammunition through a supply officer.

"This helps alleviate the misplacement of supplies. Now we have a monthly inventory that lets them track where bullets are going," added Talbert. "They see how well we operate and want to be more like us. They take what we suggest and adopt it with their own methods."

According to Zuher Abdulwahab Habib, Adamiyah District operations commissioner, one of the most practical procedures Soldiers of the 300th MP Co. have passed on is how to track criminal activities. Using a district map on the wall of the operations center, the IPs employ color-coded push-pins to track murders, rapes, improvised explosive devices, burglaries and other crimes.

"We track with this map where significant things happen, so we can send more IPs to areas that are more dangerous," said Zuher, who gets most of his intelligence from Americans. "We work together as a team and set up a patrol distribution system."

As joint patrols are becoming less and less frequent, because of handover of responsibilities, MPs are focusing more on helping the community to trust IPs, added Shipway. On patrol, they give IPs lessons in how to interact with the community they protect.

"Most of the community keeps telling us we are doing a good job," said Zuher, who has been a policeman for more than 30 years. "They know we are here to help."

The MPs reinforce the importance of talking with locals and passing out literature and tip cards detailing what to do and who to call if local citizens find themselves in trouble.

"We let them know that the IPs aren't bad people, corrupt people, that they can go to them whenever they have a problem, just like law enforcement back in the States," added Shipway.

After working with and coaching IPs for almost a year, they have a lot of trust and faith in the MPs to teach them the right things, continued Shipway.

"I feel that I came over here and did my job to my fullest potential," Shipway said. "I go out every day and give it what I can. If I teach them one thing, it's a success in my book."

Agency for KIA Recovery & Identification (MAKRI).
“The most rewarding thing about the mission is being able to work with ROK army and being able to work with the Korean version of JPAC (MAKRI),” said Staff Sgt. Lamont Davenport, recovery sergeant, Detachment 4, JPAC.
“I’m glad they were here,” said Sgt. 1st Class Alberto Culanding, team sergeant, JPAC. “They’re helping us. MAKRI soldiers know what they’re doing, what they’re looking for. We have them working, digging in the hole alongside us.”
“MAKRI and local Republic of Korea army support has been very good. (We) couldn’t ask for a more pleasant people to work with,” Silverstein said. “They’re excellent, smart, diligent, very attentive and disciplined.”
Silverstein got his questions about MAKRI answered during the ongoing mission in Korea. He said he never knew if MAKRI had been out at a site before or the processes needed to be worked out.

He learned memorandums of understanding (MOUs) between JPAC and MAKRI and professional development are in place.
“(The MOUs) will help with shared intelligence, consistent standards,” said Silverstein.
“I think it’s a great event showcasing two different countries working together,” Castro said. “It shows a partnership of us working together to find the missing.”
JPAC ramps up Korea missions
JPAC has recently made strides to conduct more recovery operations in South Korea as the population of witnesses and family members of MIAs back in U.S. age.
“In the past, we had research and field resources dedicated to the DPRK (the People’s Democratic Republic of Korea). The analysts that had focused on maintaining the operations tempo in the DPRK can now dedicate much of their effort to the ROK,” Silverstein said.
“Like most of our conflicts,” he continued, “we are faced with an aging generation of primary witnesses, and we are trying to gather as (much) information and identify sites in a race against this waning resource.

“The op tempo in ROK is dependent on the ability of the J2 (researchers) to identify sites and on the priorities established by the command,” Silverstein said.
JPAC missions in South Korea have much easier logistics compared to operations in other countries, Silverstein said.
“Because of the long history of cooperative endeavors, the SOFA (Status of Forces Agreement), and the U.N. and U.S. presence, operations usually receive the highest level of cooperation and minimal bureaucratic or political obstructions,” Silverstein explained.
“With many of the other countries we work in, it is the opposite. We are overcoming a long period of distrust, working hard to build political and professional bridges that are already in place in the ROK,” he added.
Joint POW/MIA Accounting Command recovery teams are conducting recovery operations in the provinces of Kangwon and Kyongsang from May 10–June 18.

Terminal Fury ’09 tests defenses in Pacific theater

SPC. ASHLEY ARMSTRONG
94th Army Air and Missile Defense Command

HICKAM AIR FORCE BASE – Soldiers of the 94th Army Air and Missile Defense Command (AAMDC), headquartered at Fort Shafter, put on their war faces during the second part of Terminal Fury 2009, here, May 16-21, as they reacted to scenarios.
Terminal Fury, a joint and combined training exercise, is designed to improve joint and combined warfighting capability and readiness, to ensure operational plans are credible, to advance regional security cooperation (RSC), and to posture forces for agile and responsive employment.
“It was an advantage to work with the joint forces because it provides an opportunity to collaborate to develop courses of action to ensure that the Pacific Command (PACOM) Ballistic Missile Defense (BMD) environment successfully executes with the PACOM commander’s intent,” said Sgt. 1st Class Robin Parker, plans noncommissioned officer, 94th AAMDC.
Approximately 3,000 service members under PACOM participated and learned to focus on pre-hostilities and transition to war in defense of the PACOM area of responsibility.
“This exercise was very ambiguous,” according to said Maj. Michele Torne, exercise planner, 94th AAMDC. It was ambiguous because they were trying to emulate what would happen in a real world peace time scenario.
“Which is something we aren’t used to exercising,” added Torne.

Planners focused attention on developing a wide range of scenarios.
“We were focused on challenging the unit. ...Some things we were doing would be a first-time effort achieved by a warfighting unit. It’s always great to be in a team that accomplishes something for the first time,” said Parker.
The Missile Defense Agency provided the command, control, battle management, and communications (C2BMC) system with a subject matter expert (SME) to assist with the warfighting system, said Parker.
The SME’s knowledge and information greatly affected exercise simulations.
“It’s always great to be in a team that accomplishes something for the first time.”
Sgt. 1st Class Robin Parker
Plans Noncommissioned Officer, 94th Army Air and Missile Defense Command
“New techniques and tactics were developed with the (expert’s) assistance and part of the outcome will be to drive down new avenues to increase the unit’s ability to assess threats to validate the analysis of C2BMC with other theater battle management core systems,” said Parker.
Each exercise shed light on strengths and weaknesses within different participating components. The purpose of the exercises was to reinforce strengths and overcome weaknesses.

8th TSC names Engler, Grothe as top NCO, Soldier of the Year

SCHOFIELD BARRACKS – The 8th Theater Sustainment Command (TSC) named its Noncommissioned Officer (NCO) and Soldier of the Year at Schofield Barracks after a military board concluded the three-day challenge to select the winners, May 21.

Sgt. Elizabeth Engler, noncommissioned officer in charge (NCOIC), processing section, 125th Finance Company, and Spc. Matthew Grothe, military police officer, Headquarters and Headquarters Detachment, 728th Military Police Battalion, were selected as the NCO and Soldier of the Year, respectively.

They were among the seven competitors vying for the opportunity to represent the 8th TSC this year at the U.S. Army-Pacific (USARPAC) NCO and Soldier of the Year competition. Winners at the USARPAC level represent the region Armywide.

During a three-day period, the Soldiers competed in an Army physical fitness test, a rifle competition, a land naviga-perform in their military occupation.

"I had to do a crash course in land navigation," Engler said, laughing. "I was struggling a bit, but I took my time verifying all my points and did better than I expected."

Grothe, who won the Soldier of the Year competition, said the board was the biggest challenge for him.

"Boards are always the hardest part for me," he said. "I can remember everything when I'm sitting around talking about it, but when you are getting grilled by sergeants major you can forget a lot of it."

The competition may be over for the other Soldiers, but for Engler and Grothe, their studying is not over ... they have to keep the books cracked open for the next phase, the USARPAC level.

For anyone with the desire to compete in a Soldier/NCO of the Year competition, Engler gave some advice.

"Come to these events with an open mind," Engler said. "Do your best and look to these competitions as an opportunity to showcase (your best effort)."

(WAAF), 48 at Helemano Military Reservation, and three at Mendonca Park during the last four months.

The numbers look high, he said, because they encompass a broad range of statistics and cover a longer period of time than normally reported.

"There's one main take-away," Denzler said. "The large majority of our larcenies have one common theme. ... People are not securing their property, their quarters, their vehicles, and they're leaving their scooters and bicycles out on their front porches. ... I've said it before," he continued, "unfortunately, we don't live in Mayberry."

Statistics indicate that juvenile family members are the culprits of many of the larcenies.

"Maj. Gen. (Raymond) Mason is not happy with what he sees," Denzler said, pointing out that the U.S. Army-Hawaii (USARHAW) senior commander wants "safe and respectful communities for all of us to enjoy."

"We need to tell folks what 'right' looks like," Denzler said. He briefly discussed Mason's strategy to enhance and strengthen communities.

Army Hawaii Family Housing

Fencing replacement projects (in WAAF, Canby and Sante Fe areas) and housing exterior color schemes (in Kalakaua, Porter, Kaena and Moyer communities) were among top items Hintz discussed for AHFH.

He reported three new "tot lots" have been constructed in the Porter community, and residents who renew their leases by Aug. 31 will be entered to win two season passes to Hawaiian Waters Adventure Park. The AHFH Web site has full details at www.ArmyHawaiiFamilyHousing.com.

Concluding, Hintz said a $500 reward incentive is still available for any resident who gives information leading to the arrest and conviction of criminals responsible for damage and graffiti in AHFH areas. Even the new Moyer community, he reported, has been damaged by graffiti.

Army Community Service (ACS)

Brandy Gray explained the many services provided by ACS. She highlighted several new offerings, such as a Cooking & Coping class at Schofield, a Stroller Strong support group at Tripler Army Medical Center, and an Art in the Park program at Helemano Military Reservation.

"Ask the Commander"

"In an effort to bring you new ways to get your questions answered, we have our 'Ask the Commander' program," explained Ophelia Isreal, with Customer Management Services, part of USAG-HI's Plans, Analysis and Integration Office.

Isreal said two components comprise the new service – a dedicated e-mail address and TV2 tapings. Community members can submit questions to the garrison commander at AskTheCommander@hawaii.army.mil. Selected answers will be provided in the Hawaii Army Weekly newspaper and online; however, all questions will receive responses.

Community members can personally ask a question at the first TV2 taping for the program, June 8, 11 a.m.-noon, at the Aliamanu Military Reservation community center.

More details about the "Ask the Commander" program are forthcoming, Isreal explained.

The town hall concluded with a question-and-answer period. A dozen participants addressed various concerns. Most contentious topics included fencing, housing maintenance and follow-up, street parking, speeding and other irresponsible driving.

25th CAB creates most realistic training environment possible

In part two of the series, Brigade leadership recognizes hard work

25th Combat Aviation Brigade Public Affairs

WHEELER ARMY AIRFIELD — Soldiers of 25th Combat Aviation Brigade (CAB) earned praise from senior leaders during their recent comprehensive Culminating Training Event (CTE), held in preparation for the 25th CAB's upcoming deployment.

The CTE forced CAB Soldiers to operate under increased stress and uniquely challenging situations. Still, the brigade managed do safely and successfully fly more than 2,000 hours while conducting diverse missions — convoy operations, downed aircraft recovery, resupply missions, humanitarian relief, water purification, unmanned aerial vehicle recovery, medical evacuations, reconnaissance and surveillance, close combat attacks, military operations on urban terrain training, and many other combat-focused operations.

A major component distinguished the training event as unique, according to Maj. John Barry, simulation and plans officer, 25th CAB.

"This was the first truly integrated aviation LVC (live, virtual and constructive) event, linking the virtual world and the various training scenarios into live individual Soldier training," said Barry.

Sgt. 1st Class Tyrone C. Marshall Jr. | 25th Combat Aviation Brigade Public Affairs

Soldiers from B Company, 209th Aviation Support Battalion, "Lobos," 25th CAB, representing the battalion's Downed Aircraft Recovery Team, recover a downed helicopter during a training exercise at Schofield Barracks, April 26. The exercise is part of the 25th CAB's Culminating Training Event.

The CAB integrated the virtual and constructive elements into its home station training to create the most realistic training environment possible. The training focused on key staff functions at the brigade and battalion level while also training Soldiers and leaders at each level, all the way down to the individual Soldier.

"The bottom line is that this integrated CTE enabled us to engage training objectives that we will actually be doing downrange, which better prepares not only our staff but also our individual Soldiers with as much reality as possible," Barry said.

Col. Michael Lundy, commander, 25th CAB, elaborated on some specific accomplishments during the CTE.

"The CAB conducted over 669 flights flying over 2,200 hours," said Lundy. "That includes over 1,965 hours of live flight time and 240 hours of virtual flying using a system called the Aviation Combined Arms Tactical Trainer, or AVCATT.

"CTE situational training and full spectrum operations were conducted on Oahu, Kauai, National Training Center and Pohokuloa Training Area (PTA) from April 25 through May 3," Lundy said. "This included everything from counter (improvised explosive device) missions to congressional delegation support."

The goal of the complex operations was to give senior leaders a final opportunity to train, refine and validate the most current tactics, techniques and procedures (TTP) as they apply in today's operating environment in Iraq.

Equally vital was the opportunity to observe Soldiers in action, correct any deficiencies and ensure unit cohesion with future unit attachments that will integrate with the 25th CAB once deployed.

"Our objective was to put leaders out there and eliminate their weaknesses," said Command Sgt. Maj. Osvaldo Martell, 209th Aviation Support Battalion. "We owe that to the Soldiers, from senior to the most junior Soldiers. It is our responsibility to train them.

"If leaders don't know, they won't be able to train their junior Soldiers," Martell added, "so I think everybody learned where they can improve."

With the CTE complete, 25th CAB senior leaders can take the lessons learned from the CTE and use them to continue improving operating procedures right up until the unit's scheduled rotation to Iraq.

Understanding this point, the Wings of Lightning Brigade commander extended appreciation for the brigade and all of the supporting elements during the exercise.

"This exercise was instrumental in our predeployment operations as it provided the necessary stress across the brigade to continue to improve all of our systems, processes and TTPs," said Lundy.

While the name of each Soldier etched into the memorial was read, lei were placed at the base of the memorial by a Soldier from the unit of the fallen warrior.

“In life, their bonds to one another were distant – stretching across various companies and battalions, and even differing years of deployment,” said McCaffrey. “This ground now provides a physical tie between the memory of each of them, their units, and the wide range of dates and distant locations where they gave their last full measure.”

Deep emotion was evident during the reading of the names. Many battle-hardened warrior eyes turned down with the thought of remembering each Soldier.

“We (Cpl. William McMillian III) spent time with the (Pohokuloa Training Area) aid station, and Charlie Med (C Company, 225th Bde. Support Bn.) through all the training and prep for the deployment,” said Maj. Adam Brown, brigade surgeon, 2nd SBCT, in reflection of one of the warriors.

“He was a great medic that was always thinking of ways to help the Soldier, and make his mission better,” Brown added. “He was always so upbeat about things; he’d be very pleased that so many people would be here to remember him and all the warriors.”

An honor guard fired a 21-gun salute, which was immediately followed by the playing of Taps.

“We have chosen to honor these men at the place where they lived,” stated McCaffrey. “It is here, on the warrior plains of Leilehua, that these men trained to serve and fight in a distant and ancient land ... this monument is amidst the shadows of the units from which they hailed.

“We know they will continually remind us, and those who will follow us, that the cost of service and freedom is incalculable,” McCaffrey concluded.

“Our communities are strengthened by the efforts of military volunteers who spend countless hours helping to improve schools, churches and many local service organizations,” he said.

Luncheon attendees expressed their feelings of appreciation for the luncheon and the people of Hawaii.

“I’ve always felt very welcome here in Hawaii, and this event compounds that,” said Spc. Christopher Schwauer, U.S. Army-Pacific (USARPAC), who attended the luncheon with his wife.

The luncheon culminated with an awards presentation that recognized outstanding service members of the year.

Staff Sgt. Jacob Ferrara, 94th Army Air Missile Defense Command, was awarded Outstanding Noncommissioned Officer of the Year for the Army. Ferrara, an assistant operations sergeant, is also the U.S. Army-Pacific 2008 Noncommissioned Officer of the Year.

SCHOFIELD BARRACKS — The words were sometimes difficult to find for retired Sgt. 1st Class Don Cook during his visit to the post cemetery on Memorial Day.

"... I have feelings when I come here ... I lost good friends."

As a member of the Military Order of the Purple Heart, Cook came to remember friends lost in combat, and his perspective offered special poignancy for the more than 80 in attendance at the remembrance ceremony, Monday.

Accompanied by two other honored Purple Heart members, Ace Kaleohano and Moses Pakaki, Cook gently laid a flowered wreath at the base of the flagpole as the American symbol hung at half-mast.

"I will continue to come and pay honor to all veterans every year until I die," Cook said. "I hope after I pass, others will continue to remember the service and sacrifice from those who served in all wars."

Surrounded by both past and present members of the military ohana, Col. Matthew Margotta, commander, U.S. Army Garrison-Hawaii (USAG-HI), called the day "a solemn celebration of freedom ... a commemoration of those who have fallen, and a celebration of those who have served."

Representatives of Disabled American Veterans, Veterans of Foreign Wars, and Women Veterans of America organizations each paid respects as members placed lei under the flagpole and saluted in respect to service members, past, present, and in conflict.

Following the veterans organizations, USAG-HI garrison Command Sgt. Maj. Robert Williamson presented a wreath honoring all fallen Soldiers.

Like Cook, Williamson also struggled to find the precise words to describe the day, and his thoughts turned to current times and challenges.

"(Memorial Day is a) reflection from where we came from, and the road ahead.

War is still going on," he said.

Local volunteers create rainbows of remembrance for Soldiers

WAIHAWA — Each year before Memorial Day, dozens of senior citizens gather, here, like worker bees to flowers, to participate in an annual patriotic service project — making lei for the grave sites of those interred at Schofield Barracks Post Cemetery.

The volunteers are members of the Wahiawa Rainbow Seniors Club, and Friday morning they came together with gladness in their hearts, and weathered yet willing hands, to slowly begin the task of stringing a rainbow of freshly picked flowers for this year's challenge. They produced 1,740 leis in eight hours.

Now in its third consecutive year, the Memorial Day lei-making event began as a suggestion from the seniors themselves, said Leslie Stewart, chief, Casualty and Mortuary Affairs Assistance Center, Schofield Barracks. "They approached us (in 2007) because they wanted to get involved and volunteer their services."

"These are altruistic, community-minded folks putting forth work for our Schofield Barracks neighbors," explained the group's president Noelle Sutherland.

In the past, the group produced lei approximately two-feet in length. This year, however, the volunteers were asked that the floral wreaths be scaled back to 18 inches.

"It's still a circle of flowers, but they're almost lei po'o," explained Sutherland, in reference to the traditional haku lei worn at the top of one's head.

After receiving this year's instructions, the seniors wasted little time. At 7 a.m., the first wave of club members sprang into action, sorting through some 20 bags of plumeria, numerous branches of bouganvillia, and a large box of handpicked stephanotis, courtesy of the club's nonagenarian, Helen Liu.

Ti leaves were heated in a microwave oven to increase their pliability for shaping. And the lei, particularly the bouganvillia and ti leaf, were separated to prevent the colors from bleeding onto each other, and then boxed.

At 10:11 a.m., lei counter Yvonne

Okazaki checked her list and realized the group had finished 350 lei. When asked if the volunteers would be able to make a deadline less than five hours away, Okazaki nodded confidently.

"Can do," she said. "I have faith in these ladies."

Fifteen minutes later, another 150 lei had been completed and boxed, bringing the group's total to an even 500. And, 30 minutes after that, the count rose to 650.

"The ladies are actually starting to slow down, so we've decided to give them some sugar," said Okazaki, observing. After a brief pause, she blurted out, "Go get some cake, girls!"

When the day was nearly done, one volunteer, Vilia Robertson, reflected upon the group's efforts. She expressed gratitude for being a part of a project that gives back to those who served their country and are now buried at the Schofield cemetery.

"Our family is very patriotic, and this is how we give back to the military," said Robertson, whose deceased father, Lt. Col. Terry Adamiya, was a member of the famous Asian-American unit, the 442nd Infantry Regiment. He was once stationed at Schofield Barracks. "After all, without the military, where would we be?"

The garlands were put in coolers until Memorial Day morning when islandwide groups of Cub Scouts, Boy Scouts, and Girls Scouts carefully placed the wreaths, along with miniature U.S. flags, at the grave sites at Schofield Barracks Post Cemetery.

The Wahiawa Rainbow Seniors Club efforts — along with those from other organizations, including the Wahiawa Mission and volunteers at the Wahiawa Botanical Gardens — continue to be appreciated by those who plan and coordinate the annual event.

Spouses display brawn and brains during GI Jane Day event

Story and Photos by
BILL MOSSMAN
Staff Writer

SCHOFIELD BARRACKS — Midway through GI Jane Day, Saturday, Josie Dyon and Angie Kennedy were asked what they would tell their husbands at the conclusion of a physically and mentally demanding day of activities, here.

After a brief pause, the military wives looked at each other and in unison boldly declared, “Buddy, we can do it too!” before breaking into a chorus of laughter.

It was a statement undoubtedly shared by many of the 85 participants, who rolled up their sleeves, flexed their muscles and proved that not only did they have the brawn for military life, but the brains as well.

Hosted by the rear detachment of the 3rd Infantry Brigade Combat Team (3IBCT), GI Jane Day is the Army’s way of acquainting spouses to a typical Soldier’s workday.

Event participants were divided into teams to complete a slew of challenging courses at the Leadership Reaction Course, here. The teams also experienced the Military Operations on Urbanized Terrain (MOUT) site, where the spouses got up close and personal with the kinds of weapons their Soldiers often carry.

“We’re trying to give them a military experience as best and as safely as we can,” explained Capt. Sean Weeks, 3IBCT. “For some of them, all they know is, ‘Well my husband comes home from work in a dirty uniform, and I cook a meal, and then he’s gone.’

“(GI Jane Day) sort of gives the spouse a taste of what their Soldiers, husbands or family members go through,” Weeks explained.

The biggest challenge facing many of the participants was learning to build camaraderie and work toward a common goal.

“In the military, it’s a lot easier to give orders because the rank is the leader,” explained Sgt. 1st Class Jimmie Jackson, 3IBCT, who helped organize the event. “To me, it would seem tougher for these women, who don’t have that same type of rank structure. But, they were able to overcome a great challenge and somehow gain consensus among each other.”

Nowhere was this attitude more evident than on the 3rd Brigade, Special Troops Battalion, rear detachment team of spouses. The members, which included Dyon and Kennedy, could be observed actively communicating and encouraging each other throughout the day.

“Not once was there any bickering in our group,” Dyon said. “We were all open to everyone’s ideas, and I think that’s pretty unique to find in a team.”

“For not knowing each other really well, I think we’ve done a pretty good job,” Kennedy added.

While teamwork was essential to completing the courses, participants also had to problem solve rather quickly. The courses required team members to safely traverse obstacles while avoiding “mines,” or those areas marked in red, and “quicksand,” while racing against a 12-minute time limit.

Ligaya Hartman, in green, and teammate Josie Dyon, at rear, attempt to navigate a 75-pound wooden plank onto an adjacent swing in order to form a bridge for participants to safely cross over, during GI Jane Day activities, Saturday, at Schofield Barracks.

“These courses require critical thinking,” Jackson explained, “but there is no right way to do any of this. It all comes down to what you can think of.”

Such was the case with 14-year-old Ashleigh Auna, a 2-27th Infantry Battalion team member. The teenager convinced her father, Master Sgt. Von Auna, 3IBCT, to add her to the team so she could experience what he does on a daily basis.

He agreed, and she didn’t disappoint. She promptly pulled off the day’s most ingenious move on the course.

While Auna’s team was crossing over quicksand, using only an 8-foot-long plank of wood and rope, her team members suddenly realized they still needed to retrieve the plank. Auna volunteered and completed the task by hanging upside down from a rope — while carefully sliding the plank over the quicksand and safely back to her teammates.

“I’ve never seen that done in my 20 years in the military,” admitted Jackson, shaking his head with incredulity. “That was creative.”

In the end, the same endorsement could be said about all of the GI Jane Day participants.

Or as Sgt. Laquanda Bligen told one particular unit following the completion of a course, “Ladies, that was an outstanding job. You all can take my place anytime.”

Chapels invite children to Crocodile Dock ‘Where fearless kids shine God’s Light’

U.S. ARMY GARRISON-HAWAII PUBLIC AFFAIRS
News Release

SCHOFIELD BARRACKS — The Schofield Barracks Main Post Chapel (MPC) and the Aliamanu Military Reservation (AMR) Chapel are accepting applications for Vacation Bible School (VBS).

“Rockin’ in the swamp, having fun, making new friends and learning more about Jesus’ love is what this year’s ‘Crocodile Dock’ VBS theme is all about,” said Kathy Whalen, director of religious education, South Community Chapels. “We all learn best through our experiences, so VBS is set up for the children to be doing Bible study, music, drama, crafts and snacks.

“Their experience in each activity is related to the theme for the day,” Whalen continued, “which truly helps them remember and own that experience.”

The Schofield Barracks program will run June 15-19, 9 a.m.-noon, at the Main Post Chapel (MPC), Building 790, and the AMR program will run July 13-17, 9-11:45 a.m. at the AMR Chapel, Building 1790.

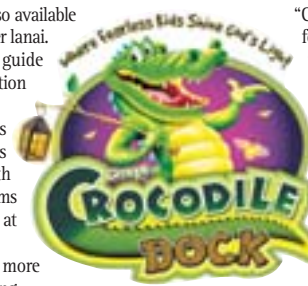

Crocodile Dock is for children who are 4 years old by June 1 through students who have just completed sixth grade.

Parents can register their children at the Schofield Barracks MPC, Tuesday-Thursday, 10 a.m.-2 p.m., and Sundays, 10 a.m.-noon.

A self-registration table is also available at the AMR Chapel on the lower lanai. Directions on the form will guide applicants through the registration process.

Additionally, the chapel has slots open for youth volunteers in seventh through twelfth grades or adults. Volunteer forms will also be available to fill out at the VBS registration table.

The chapel hopes to have more volunteers be part of this exciting week.

“Crocodile Dock” VBS is perfect for children who have just moved to Hawaii because they meet friends right away, and the entire family gets introduced to a congregation of people to help support them as they settle in.

For more information, call the Schofield Barracks (655-6645) or AMR Chapel (833-8175) Religious Education departments.

Families, leadership take part in Lantern Floating Ceremony

Story and Photos by
BILL MOSSMAN
Staff Writer

HONOLULU — Standing in knee-deep waters among the thousands at Ala Moana Beach Park, Amy Urbina’s thoughts were as distant as the cruise-liners and boats dotting the horizon, Monday evening.

In her mind’s eye, she could only see two men: her deceased brother and her deployed husband, who was off in a faraway land, fighting a war.

Urbina longed to be in their presence at that moment — to hold them in her arms once again, but resigned to the fact that her fondest wishes would not be happening anytime soon.

She settled for the next best thing, writing each of them a personal message filled with love and hope, and then sending these words out into the waters before her.

“I thought I’d do this for my brother, Jimmy, who was 46 when he passed away last May 4,” she said. “I also wanted to do this for my husband, Lt. Col. Luis Urbina, who is currently deployed to Iraq. For him, all I wrote was, ‘Just come back safely.’”

“He’s always on my mind,” added Urbina about her husband of 10 years, “even though we’re worlds apart.”

For Capt. Ines Sanchez, Tripler Army Medical Center, remembering those who have passed on is a topic that’s always on her mind. And so she, along with her parents, Gabriel Sanchez and Teresa Espinoza of Ecuador, crafted their messages in their native tongue, Spanish, for several long-gone family members and friends.

“I feel like today has been good for me,” explained Sanchez, who works as a nurse in labor and delivery. “It has helped bring closure and allowed me to say goodbye to those people who I wasn’t able to say it to.”

Urbina and Sanchez were among the military family members who rode in from Schofield Barracks to participate in the annual Lantern Floating Hawaii Ceremony, May 25.

The 10th annual event, themed “Many Rivers, One Ocean,” saw record-level crowds lining the shoreline at the park and allowed residents and visitors to cast afloat more than

2,000 candlelit lanterns as a way of peacefully remembering loved ones who have passed.

For the Army leadership in Hawaii, the Lantern Floating Ceremony also represented an opportunity to not only remember but to help wounded warriors and family members heal.

“We are willing to try anything, to pursue any avenue that will help any Soldier in the recovery process,” said Loran Doane, media relations chief, U.S. Army Garrison-Hawaii (USAG-HI). “And if one Soldier walks away from here feeling better about himself, then it will all be worth it.”

Lantern officials reached out to USAG-HI with event sponsor Na Lei Aloha Foundation by sending representatives to conduct pre-event workshops and lectures at Schofield Barracks and Fort Shafter, earlier this month.

Col. Matthew Margotta, commander, USAG-HI, expressed gratitude to be representing the branch of the military that shares many of the same traditions as those espoused at the ceremony.

“I think it really shows the Army has become an integral and accepted part of the Hawaiian community,” Margotta said. “We try to say that we’re not separate and distinct from the Hawaiian community. We’re all family members, and our Soldiers and our kids are all part of it.”

Margotta also wrote tributes on a lantern to those currently serving in the armed forces as well as to a fallen comrade — best friend Maj. Andy Burris, who lost his life “in the Middle East a couple of years ago.”

“To be invited this year to participate in what is essentially a Hawaiian tradition means an awful lot to those of us who wear the uniform.”

FMWR’s lantern floating trip a hit with Army riders

BILL MOSSMAN
Staff Writer

HONOLULU — U.S. Army Garrison-Hawaii’s Family and Morale, Welfare and Recreation (FMWR) and Outdoor Recreation (ODR) staff are getting a big “thumbs up” for the logistical support provided to military families attending the Lantern Floating Ceremony at Ala Moana Beach Park, Memorial Day.

Soldiers and family members that took advantage of the first-year complimentary bus service, agreed that parking issues and unfamiliarity with the park and its surrounding areas, would have likely kept them on post had it not been for the FMWR bus service.

More than 40,000 visitors and residents attended the 10th annual event this year, lining the shores of Ala Moana Beach Park as early as 10 a.m.

“I hate to say it, but I probably wouldn’t have come because it would have been just me and my daughter,” admitted Amy Urbina, who attended the ceremony with her toddler, Hannah. “I mean, where would I go? Who would I ask? And to do it all on my own with my 2-year-old? No.”

Capt. Ines Sanchez also enjoyed the use of the three canopies provided by FMWR for the event and set up by ODR staff well before the bus arrived from Schofield Barracks.

“This is cool and convenient,” said Sanchez of the tents, whose occupants included her elderly parents, Gabriel Sanchez and Teresa Espinoza of Ecuador.

Conor Joyce, recreation specialist and programs manager, ODR, said the free service would be offered again next year — with a few additional features.

“Next year, we’ll bring grills, barbecue, some of our own water supplies, and maybe even kayaks,” he said. “That’ll make it more of a full-activity day for our families.”

The Schofield Barracks bus service left Sgt. Smith Theater at 11 a.m. and returned to post shortly after the ceremony at 9 p.m.

5th Annual Dog Walk –

The 5th Annual Hawaii Kai Dog Walk is June 7. Check-in starts at 6:30 a.m., and paws hit the pavement at 7:30 a.m. The event promises to be a great day to exercise, socialize and celebrate the human-animal bond.

This year's theme, "Off Leash and Loving It!" is in recognition of the Hawaii Kai Dog Park's first anniversary. The 2.3-mile walk meets at the Hawaii Kai Park & Ride on Keahole Street.

The $20 registration fee includes a T-shirt, goodie bag, bottled water and a chance to win a prize. Proceeds support the dog park and other off-leash parks on the island.

A .7-mile route for small or older dogs is available. Contact hui-ilio@hawaii.rr.com.
