3RD ID supports senior leader huddle

Abigail Meyer
Fort Bliss Public Affairs Office

FORT BLISS, Texas -- An Army command post is the nucleus of a military operation. It must function seamlessly and commanders must know what's happening on the battlefield at all times.

In today's evolving combat environment, command posts must evolve too. Leaders from across the Army met at Fort Bliss, Texas, Jan. 18, 2017, to discuss how today's Army will build the command post of the future.

"Lessons from ongoing conflicts around the world tell us it's imperative that we increase the mobility and streamline the footprint of our command posts," said Gen. Robert "Abe" Abrams, commanding general, U.S. Forces Command. "We have to make our command posts more effective, mobile and survivable. Events like this command post huddle at Fort Bliss keep the Army ready to fight and win our nation's wars in a dynamic environment."

Leaders used examples of training exercises to show what was working and where capabilities need to be improved. Part of the huddle focused on solutions able to be standardized across the Army, creating commonalities in command posts.

They talked size, making scalable and redundant command posts to improve survivability from a brigade-sized element up to a corps. They discussed network capabilities and worked to define terms applicable across the Army.

"We have to continually adjust our thinking and our approach to combat. The rise of near-peer threats, coupled with an increasingly expeditionary mindset, dictate our need for command posts that are capable, yet more mobile and survivable at every echelon," said Lt. Gen. Sean MacFarland, commanding general, III Corps.

Full-scale examples of pared-down tactical operations centers were set up behind the Fort Bliss Mission Training Center and units from 2nd Brigade, 1st Armored Division, III Corps, 3rd Infantry Division, and 1st Armored Division headquarters to show leaders different examples of command post setups.

"We need two command posts. We need to be able to shut one down and move it while the other is still in the fight," said Maj. Gen. Pat White, 1st Armored Division and Fort Bliss commanding general.

Marne Tax Center available for free tax assistance

The Marne Tax center, serving active and retired Soldiers, and their eligible Family Members, conducted their Grand Openings Jan. 20 at Fort Stewart and Jan. 23 at Hunter Army Airfield to help provide free tax filing for the 2016 tax season, which runs through April 18.

On-hand to help conduct the ribbon cutting for the Tax Center, which is located at building 816 Gulick Road, the Hunter Army Airfield Garrison Commander Lt. Col. Mike Squires expressed his appreciation for the efforts made each year by the Tax Center Staff.

Squires humorously noted that while paying taxes was often referred to as one of life's two certainties (not mentioning the other being death); he said the funds generated from taxes helps benefit everyone.

Army leaders met at Fort Bliss, Texas, Jan. 18 for a command post huddle. Commanders discussed how to make command posts smaller, more mobile and survivable.

Some of the key discussions centered on how to make tactical operations centers more mobile, able to move rapidly from one location to the next, to what networking capabilities work best for these smaller footprints without losing essential functions.

“(Command post redesign) gives us a redundant capability for our mission command information systems so we can stay in the fight,” said Maj. Gen. James “Jim” Rainey, commanding general, 3rd Infantry Division.

Army senior leaders who participated in the command post huddle included Gen. Robert “Abe” Abrams, commanding general, U.S. Forces Command (via teleconference), Lt. Gen. Patrick Donahue II, deputy commanding general, U.S. Forces Command, Lt. Gen. Joseph Anderson, deputy chief of staff, U.S. Army, Lt. Gen. Sean MacFarland, commanding general, III Corps, Lt. Gen. Stephen M. Twitty, commanding general, First Army, Lt. Gen. Stephen Lanza, commanding general, I Corps, and Lt. Gen. Timothy Kadavy, director, Army National Guard. Division commanders and command team members from 1st Armored Division, 3rd Infantry Division, 4th Infantry Division, 10th Mountain Division, 82nd Airborne Division, 1st Cavalry Division, U.S. Army Reserve Command, U.S. Army Alaska, 7th Infantry Division, 25th Infantry Division and 1st Infantry Division provided input.

Leaders spoke about broad issues affecting units on the battlefield and also talked detailed equipment requirements and feasibility. Discussion and ideas from this command post huddle will serve to address options and establish requirements as the Army develops the next generation of command posts.

TAX CENTER

“What do taxes buy us?” Squires asked attendees.

“It is an investment that helps fund the building of hospitals and roads – things we normally wouldn’t pay for ourselves. Services and programs that collectively improve the quality of life for all of us.”

Squires said thanks to the installation’s legal assistance office and the Marne Tax Center, tax assistance was available to Soldiers, retirees, and their families.

Capt. Elizabeth Strickland, Chief of Legal Assistance at Fort Stewart said last year the tax center saved the Fort Stewart-Hunter Army Airfield Community approximately $2 million in tax preparation fees associated with filing taxes, helping return $8 million in refunds.

The Marne Tax Center Officer in Charge, Capt. Justin Ervin said the tax center has twenty-one Soldiers acting as borrowed military manpower from the various tenant units on Fort Stewart, as well as another eight for Hunter Army Airfield to help provide service to community members at both locations. But Ervin also noted that two additional civilian paralegals were returning to help provide quality control – Bruce Anglin at Fort Stewart and Dorothy Andrews at Hunter.

Strickland notes the Soldiers were trained through the Volunteer Tax Assistance Program, VITA. This program trains tax preparers on the new tax software – Tax Slayer; Soldiers also received additional operational training to help facilitate service to the customer. But Anglin notes the new software provides a lot more detail and requires a little more time to fill out. Community members can help reduce wait times by bringing the proper paperwork, and maybe a little patience too.

MARNE FACES, MARNE PLACES

The Soldier behind the art

Sgt. Samantha Crecelius,
Frontline Staff

He’s a Soldier, a Marine, and an artist. And when he was injured during training, he found a way to channel all those passions together.

Assigned to Fort Stewart’s Warrior Transition Battalion while recovering from his injuries, Spc. Axel Collazo found a way to help others and transition to civilian life. He wasn’t always in the military though; starting life on a Caribbean island.

Sgt. Samantha Crecelius,
Assigned to Fort Stewart’s Warrior Transition Battalion, Spc. Axel Collazo volunteers at the installation’s Public Affairs Office helping illustrate stories and community events.

Collazo grew up in rural Puerto Rico. His hobbies were working on cars, jujitsu, and art. But he wanted to get out; to challenge himself – so he considered the Army, Marines, or maybe the National Guard. He eventually served all three – as an infantryman and as an artist.

“I wanted to join the Special Forces initially, but I thought the Marines would be good too,” Collazo said. So, signing up in July 2000, he was stationed in Camp Lejeune and was part of the first Operation Iraqi Freedom. He deployed to numerous places around the world such as Africa, Afghanistan, Japan and Iraq. After he completed his tour, he made his home in Florida; where he joined the Florida National Guard, serving with Co. A, 2nd Battalion, 124th Inf. Regiment.

Unfortunately, he injured his knees during training at Camp Blanding, Florida. The injury changed his life – limiting his physical activities – but allowing him to dedicate more of his time to art.

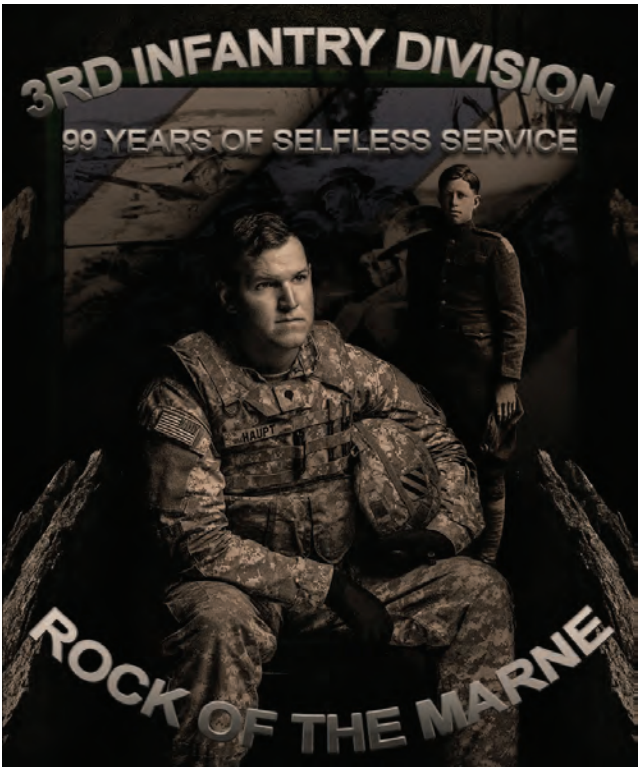

He worked toward perfecting those artistic skills for more than six years. Earning an Associate’s Degree in Visual Communications and Graphic Design; working with Adobe programs such as Photoshop, Light room, Illustrator, After Effects and Premier.

Later, when he was assigned to the Fort Stewart Warrior Transition Battalion, he discovered they had a program that allowed him to continue to serve while he recovered.

“The WTB allows Soldiers an opportunity to build new skill sets, and improve others,” Collazo said. “So, the WTB helped me intern with the 3rd Infantry Division Public Affairs at Fort Stewart.”

Helping prepare more than 90 graphics for the 3rd ID and the Fort Stewart community; his images help illustrate information campaigns that ranged from Veterans Day Ceremonies, Marne Week, and helped illuminate the 3rd Infantry Division’s 100th Year of Service with a grand banner that will be displayed at the 3rd ID Headquarters Building.

“It feels awesome to feel useful again,” Collazo said. “I can still do something with the skills I have. And maybe make a small difference doing it.”

Graphic by Spc. Axel Collazo

Featured on the Page 1 of the Nov. 24 edition of The Frontline Newspaper, Spc. Collazo combined the images of a World War I Soldier in the background of a modern Marne Soldier.

“Wounded Warriors face a challenge having to heal, while transitioning - at the same time,” Staff Sgt. Niki Felton, 3rd ID Public Affairs. “Collazo has inspired me. Rather than giving up from injuries, he found a reason to get out of bed and help make a difference. He found a way to make himself happy and contribute to the unit. He is the type of Soldier we should all be like.”

Battery C, 1st Battalion, 41st Field Artillery Regiment supported the 1st Battalion, 75th Ranger Regiment's Live Fire Exercise at Fort Stewart, Jan. 9-12. Known at Cobra Battery, the unit shot more than 250 rounds during the four-day exercise; which included several day and night iterations.

Cobra Battery Soldiers used this exercise to develop a trained and ready force leading up to their deployment to the National Training Center this spring. With the rounds delivered by the Cobra Battery, the Rangers were able to train with multiple fire support assets. "The opportunity to shoot for the Rangers gave our platoon the experience of working with a different maneuver element and allowed us to observe how artillery is integrated into a combined arms fight with various assets, to include mortars and Attack Aviation in a live environment," said 1st Lt. Gretchen Parnagian, 2nd Platoon Fire Direction Officer. This is one of the many live fire exercises 1-75th Ranger Regiment will conduct this year with 3rd Infantry Division artillery support. "Opportunities like these are important to maintain relationships with the Ranger Regiment and showcase the value of indirect fire assets," said 1st Lt. Curtis Feder, 1st Platoon Leader.

Ask the Judge

Changing your state of Residency

Capt. Mike Miranda
Legal Assistance Attorney

Q: Judge, I want to switch my state of residence ... maybe to one of those places without state income tax, like Texas or Florida. Can I just switch state residency whenever I want?

A: Sorry, but the answer is “no.” Unfortunately, you can’t just select a state at random, but there is a process to legally change your state of residence.

Q: Great! What do I have to do?

A: First, physically travel to that state. In order to change your state of residence, or domicile, you will need to abandon your old domicile and reside in the new state with the intent to make it your permanent home. You cannot arbitrarily pick a state in which you have never lived, regardless of how much you would like to move there at some point in the future.

Q: Well, I’m stationed here in Georgia, does that mean this is automatically my new domicile?

A: No, Soldiers are presumed not to change their domicile when they are physically residing in a state subject to PCS orders. On the other hand, if you want to establish domicile in the state that you are stationed in, you can do so. You will need to demonstrate your intent to abandon your old domicile by establishing some ties to the new state. Things like getting a driver’s license, registering your vehicle, registering to vote, buying or leasing property, getting married, and establishing civic and social connections in the new state all evidence an intent to permanently reside there. No one factor, though, is determinative, so the more ties that you establish, the better.

Q: OK, so how do I determine my current domicile? Is it the same thing as my Home of Record?

A: Not necessarily. You can find your currently declared state of residence by looking on your End of Month Leave and Earnings Statement. Your domicile, as mentioned above, can be changed by abandoning your old state and establishing ties and the intent to permanently reside in a new state. Your Home of Record, on the other hand, is established by the address that you were living at when you joined the military, and is used to compute travel allowances when you separate from the Army. Enlisted Soldiers can change their HOR to their new state when they reenlist. Officers cannot change their HOR, except to correct an error or after a break in service.

While your domicile and HOR might be the same state, they might be different as well. Let’s say that you joined the Army from Kansas, thereby establishing Kansas as your HOR. You then move to Virginia pursuant to PCS orders, but you don’t establish any ties in VA or renounce any ties to KS; your domicile is still Kansas. You can only have one domicile at a time, and you don’t lose that domicile until you establish another one. If instead, you register to vote in VA, register your car, get a VA driver’s license, purchase a home in VA, etc., you have likely established sufficient ties to VA to claim it as your new domicile.

Q: OK Judge, I’ve abandoned my old domicile and have established the necessary ties to my new state. What now?

A: You should submit a State of Legal Residence Certificate (DD Form 2058) to ensure that the correct amount of state income taxes (if any) are withheld from your military pay. Before submitting the DD Form 2058, you might want to consult a legal assistance attorney and discuss the steps that you’ve taken to change your domicile, just to be certain you’ve done it correctly.

If you have any additional questions please call the Fort Stewart Legal Assistance Office at 912-767-8809/19 or the Hunter Legal Assistance Office at 912-315-5115.

Marne Pride in action for 3rd ID

Jan. 16 - Jan. 22

2 total DUI's for Jan. 16 - Jan. 22
6 DUI's for Jan. 9 - Jan. 15
2 DUI's for Jan. 2 - Jan. 8

As part of the 3rd Infantry Division's Marne Pride Anti-Driving Under the Influence Campaign which began Sept. 1, 2011, the Frontline is keeping up with how Marne Soldiers at Fort Stewart-Hunter Army Airfield are doing in the campaign by publishing this chart showing how units are faring and how much more attention leaders should give on the subject of DUIs. Following is a reminder of that pledge:

I will drive safely. I will operate the vehicle safely and follow all laws and safety rules. I will wear my seat belt at all times. I will not use a cell phone to talk or text message while driving.

I won't drive if I am impaired. I will not drive after drinking or using any chemical that would alter my ability to drive safely (including certain prescription drugs).

I won't get in the car with an unsafe driver. I will not ride with someone who is impaired because of alcohol or drugs (legal or not), or with someone I know is aggressive behind the wheel. I know that I can call someone for a ride any time I feel that I need to get out of an unsafe situation.

I will respect your rules. I will drive within the boundaries we've discussed.

I will call you. If I need a ride home I can count on someone in my chain of command to either pick me up or make arrangements to have me picked up, no questions asked and without retribution.

I agree to live and abide by this pledge.

Commanders and Leaders:

I will be there for you. I/ We will ensure, that if called upon, we will either arrange for transportation or personally provide you a safe ride home, even if you have broken every rule that we have agreed to follow, we will make sure you get home safely.

I will be a good role model and lead by example. I agree to live by the same safe driving rules we have set for you.

Additionally, all new Soldiers to the Marne Division will sign a similar pledge - keep your unit off the bottle by abiding by your pledge. Don't drink and drive.

Soldiers of 6th Squadron, 8th Cavalry Regiment, 2nd Infantry Brigade Combat Team, 3rd Infantry Division polished their communication skills at Fort Stewart, Jan. 18.

6-8 Cav. Soldiers learned basic operations and procedures for an OE-254 antenna and a Harris Falcon 150 high frequency manpack radio, as well as how to perform basic communication on a Multiband Inter/Intra Team Radio.

“The Soldiers received the information pretty well,” said Sgt. Thomas Henry, an instructor and a signal support systems specialist, with Troop B, 6-8 Cav. “I had them take notes on how to set up an HF radio. While I was explaining, I was giving them hands-on examples to make sure that they know exactly how to operate it.”

Communication is crucial in military operations because Soldiers have to talk in order to keep accountability and transmit information pertinent to their mission.

“If you cannot communicate during a mission it will be difficult to accomplish your task and that can cause confusion,” said Pfc. Nicholas Toensing, a cavalry scout with Troop B, 6-8 Cav. “With (good) communication, you have an organized plan where everyone will be informed on any changes or updates.”

The knowledge learned in this class will allow Soldiers to troubleshoot and use communication devices effectively in a training or combat environment.

Some Soldiers shared their experience in combat and how communication lead to mission success.

Henry said when he was deployed, he always gave

Soldiers briefs about radios before they began an operation to refresh their memory and build confidence in their skills and equipment.

“I want to pass on my knowledge from all the experience I have to help the Soldiers understand how to be efficient in communication,” said Henry.

Henry deployed with a group of Soldiers that lost radio connection when hit by enemy fire in Iraq. They were able to regain communication immediately and call for medical assistance with the skills they learned from his brief which led to saving the life of their battle buddy.

Toensing said the training was informative. He looks forward to more practical exercises during training and sharing his new found knowledge with other Soldiers.

3rd Infantry Division Artillery Soldiers conducted a Tactical Operation Center Exercise on Thunder Field, Jan. 9-12. Thunder Soldiers established systems and processes using new equipment in preparation for their future training to include Marne Focus and War Fighter Exercise 17-04. The exercise helped train Soldiers on new airbeam shelters and revised new standard operating procedures to include a new layout within the TOC.

These new shelters provide a tactical advantage when emplacing and displacing. In a matter of hours tents, floors, power and network cabling, camouflage nets, and computer systems must be up and running to support the Division's Fires capabilities.

"The Air beams provide a less labor intensive and expedient setup/tear-down of the TOC structure itself," said DIVARTY Sgt. Maj. Eugene Johnson. "The way ahead is the continued refinement of priorities of work, which we will refine over the upcoming weeks through Sergeant's Time training."

Teen Talk

Memories

Nalona Fayson
Teen Volunteer

Being connected with the military often means traveling which plays a big part in growing up. Traveling and relocating to new areas of the world can be a great, life changing experience. Although it can be tough a time, looking at the bright side of things always helps. When your Family gets stationed to a new area, creating memories of the people and events you encounter is a big deal. You meet new people and see how their life and experiences differ from yours. You learn a lot and maybe when you're older you may want to live in that specific area.

I was fortunate to travel Washington, D.C., Virginia, New Jersey, and New York City during the holidays. The environment is drastically different from Fort Stewart. It's very fast pace, a variety of activities and events in which to participate seemed very exciting. I kept wondering, what if I had to move to one of these major cities? How would I adjust, make new friends, and learn the routines of the area? It was very scary. I'm sure military children have similar concerns. So, military children are fortunate to be connected to a military installation to help Families transition to their next duty station. MWR and Army Community Service are great organizations that provide various activities for Soldiers and Families. There's always good in something, you just have to look.

SLP provides skills, tools for success

For the second year in a row the 3rd Combat Aviation Brigade participated in the Student Leadership Program event on Hunter Army Airfield, Jan. 19.

The SLP is an energy-filled experience for a select group of high school students who envision a bright future for themselves. The program provides students with the skills and tools necessary to build a successful future.

The 3rd CAB supplied an AH-64D Apache helicopter and UH-60M Black Hawk helicopter and their pilots and crew to show to the enthusiastic crowd of students. The guest speaker was Lt. Col. Jason West, commander, 2nd Battalion, 3rd Aviation Regiment, 3rd CAB.

"I tried to put myself in their shoes and remember what it was like for me when I was in a similar leadership program back in the day," West said. "I shared with them what I would like to have heard and what I have experienced now that I am where I am at in my career."

West said that his goal was to help unlock the student's leadership potential. One of the ways he did so was by sharing an experience he had overcoming his weakness as a student. By sharing that a lieutenant colonel in the Army struggled with classes too he hoped to reach all of the students in the room, not just the gifted ones.

Chris Nowicki is a community investment specialist for Gulfstream Aerospace Corporation. He is also the director of the SLP.

"The program is all about exposing students to career opportunities and helping to develop leadership skills while they develop a plan for when they exit high school," Nowicki said.

The program is a four year commitment that begins when the students enter high school and sign up.

"Working with teachers and mentors helps the students have a solid plan like going to college or joining the military. We give them exposure and help them so that they can be successful when they graduate," Nowicki said.

After listening to West speak, the students got to get up close and view the AH-64D Apache helicopter and an UH-60M Black Hawk helicopter and listen to their pilots and crew talk about the daily life of an Army aviator.

Jamel Fogle-Washington is a junior at the Savannah Arts Academy and has been a part of the SLP for four years. The 18-year-old said he enjoys coming to the airfield and seeing the aircraft and meeting new people.

"I like coming here. Every year I come out here there is definitely something different that the program puts on for us. I like that each year is unique," Fogle-Washington said.

Students from 11 high schools attend Gulfstream Student Leadership workshop at Hunter

Nancy Gould

More than 600 students, grades nine through 12, along with 70 adults, including volunteers, teachers and advisors, visited Hunter Jan. 12 for the Gulfstream Student Leadership Program, SLP, quarterly workshop. The one-day visit included skill activities, along with other activities that showcased civilian and military career options in the U.S. Army.

Chris Nowicki, the Gulfstream community investment specialist in charge of SLP, said it was the program's third year at Hunter because of its excellent venue. In addition to introducing students to a new environment and military careers of which most students are unaware, Nowicki said the day is always successful, in part, because of the great support the program gets from the command staff and Soldiers.

Support included the 3rd Infantry Division color guard's presentation of colors, a 3rd CAB static display and a welcome by Lt. Col. Jason West, commander, 2nd Battalion, 3rd Aviation Regiment, 3rd Combat Aviation Brigade.

Throughout the day, students transitioned through activity stations, including the Hunter tarmac, where 3rd CAB pilots and mechanics showed off two helicopters, an AH-64D Longbow Apache, and UH-60M Blackhawk. They explained their capabilities and their function in the unit's mission while deployed. Students climbed into the cockpit and got a close-up view of the aircraft and the technology used by the crew.

Pfc. Jerrold Wilkins, dog handler, 93rd Military Working Dog Detachment, said he has participated in previous working dog demonstrations for SLP and he always enjoys the students' response. "I love working with the dogs and showing off their skills. Students are usually surprised that training dogs is a job with the military."

Social Media: Think before you post

Maj. William M. (Michael) Oliver
3rd ID DIVARTY Chaplain

Don't look stupid on social media. OK, now that I have your attention I'll return to the previous statement in a minute.

As a middle-aged man, I am amazed at the technological breakthroughs that have happened in my lifetime. When I was a boy, touch-dial phones replaced rotary-dial phones. When I was a teenager car-phones and stationary computers came out in the marketplace.

Fax machines, laptop computers, the Internet, email, and cellphones became available when I was a young adult in my 20s. Smartphones and social media became available when I was in my 30s. Now in my 40s, it is remarkable how social media has revolutionized how we personally and professionally communicate.

But there is a problem with social media: many people look stupid because of what they post on social media. The following are three suggestions on what not to post on social media.

1. Don't use social media to smear those closest to you. Any close relationship will have difficulties, so be wise in discussing your relational issues on social media. Your relationships can mend, but nasty comments out in cyber-space makes mending extremely difficult.

2. Be wise in posting your political and religious views. Disclaimer: your views are your views, and I'm not suggesting that you censor your views. What I am suggesting is that it matters how you state your views. Present your views in a way that others want to listen, and not in a way where others quickly dismiss you as a "donkey" - (or rather the "A" version of a donkey).

3. Be smart in what pictures you post on social media. Ask yourself, "Is this picture acceptable for the mass public's view?" Also, avoid the excessive posting of "selfies." Posting too many selfies can send the message that you're self-absorb and prideful.

If you strive to incorporate the previous three suggestions then you will not look stupid on social media. I have a lot of Facebook friends due to being a chaplain. I have unsubscribed to many of these friends' posts because their posts simply make them look really bad. I encourage you: don't be one of these people!

It is currently unknown what the App does with this data and is considered to be a risk to an individual's identity. Do not download this application!
