FORT BRAGG, N.C. - Gen. Robert B. "Abe" Abrams relinquished command of the U.S. Army Forces Command at Fort Bragg's Main Post Flag Pole, Oct. 16.

Abrams took command of FORSCOM in August 2015, spearheading numerous changes during his tenure. He implemented an increased focus on readiness, repurposed hundreds of thousands of pieces of excess equipment, significantly reduced the number of non-deployable Soldiers, revamped aviation training, improved Army business practices to save the Army $38 million and instituted more rigorous training at the Combat Training Centers. He also stood up the Security Force Assistance Brigades, deploying the 1st SFAB for the advise and assist mission in Afghanistan.

Army Chief of Staff Mark A. Milley praised Abrams' accomplishments during his three years at FORSCOM, crediting him with bringing enhanced meaning to the Army total force and increasing Soldier readiness.

"In terms of manning, training, equipping and leader development of the United States Army, there is no one person in the Army today who has done more to improve the readiness of the United States Army than Abe Abrams," said Milley. "FORSCOM's accomplishments under his leadership stand as a testament to his competence and capability."

Abrams said that while he was the one being honored, it was the leaders behind the scenes and more than 700,000 active, Reserve and National Guard Soldiers assigned to FORSCOM who accomplish the mission every day.
