Chapel team provides Angel Trees

The 50th Space Wing Chaplain's Office is running this year's Angel Tree event. Airmen are encouraged to pick one angel, candy cane or bell hanging on a tree and give back to the local community. Trees will be in the Building 210 atrium, Satellite Dish Dining Facility and Tierra Vista Community Center Nov. 16 – Dec. 8. The chapel team suggests gifts are at least $30, in total, per child. Gifts can be dropped at the 50th SW Chaplain's Office in Building 300 room 149, or the satellite chapel office in Building 210, room 270, 8 a.m.—3 p.m. Dec. 10—14. For further information, contact the 50th SW Chaplain's Office at 719-567-3705 or 719-567-5473.

Shred truck to arrive

The shred truck is set to be outside the North Entry Control Portal 9—11 a.m., and outside of Building 210 11 a.m.—1 p.m. today.

Schriever hosts inaugural iWAR panel

SCHRIEVER AIR FORCE BASE, Colo. — The 50th Space Wing hosted the inaugural Innovative Warfighters Advancing Readiness panel in Building 210 at Schriever Air Force Base, Colorado, Nov. 13.

A four-person panel chaired by Col. Jennifer Grant, 50th Space Wing commander, fielded innovative ideas from six Airmen on topics that ranged from solar panel covered parking to bolstering suicide prevention efforts on base.

The wing initiated the panel, based on Air Force Space Command's "Shark Tank" program and the Air Force's "Spark Tank" competition, to get after Air Force Chief of Staff Gen. David Goldfein's initiative to encourage innovation throughout the force.

Innovators each had five minutes to present their problem statement and solutions to the panel, panel members then asked questions to further understand the proposals.

Having previously reviewed proposal packages from the presenters, Grant said she thought all were interesting and had merit.

"This was excellent," she said. "I want to compliment everyone for having given their problems such careful consideration. Now, it's a matter of finding which ones we can practically apply and viably support."

Shana Allen, 50th Force Support Squadron management analyst, facilitated the panel and said she was impressed with the presentations.

"I think it went really well," she said. "Everyone was well-prepared and I could tell the messages were well-received. Harnessing young Airmen's creative and innovative ideas has always been critical to making improvements, not just here at Schriever, but Air Force-wide. We've got brilliant minds all over this base and we have to provide an opportunity for them to share their ideas."

Derek Hamby, 50th Space Wing Manpower and Organization chief, presented his idea to bolster suicide prevention efforts at Schriever AFB.

"I'll tell you one thing, those five minutes go way faster live than when you practice," Hamby said with a laugh. "The panel members were very responsive. It's awesome to have such direct access to the commander. This kind of opportunity really hasn't existed before."

As with all the other presenters, the panel members had several compliments and questions for Hamby to better understand the issue.

"You could tell they were listening and genuinely considering what I had to say," Hamby added. "Ultimately, I think that's what will make this program so successful, the senior leader buy-in."

After listening to the presenters, Grant had some closing comments.

"Everyone did quite well," she said. "If your idea doesn't get initially approved, don't be discouraged. It may just mean we need some

All-call details upcoming changes

By Senior Airman William Tracy
50th Space Wing Public Affairs

SCHRIEVER AIR FORCE BASE, Colo. — Col. Jennifer Grant, 50th Space Wing commander, hosted an all-call addressing future changes in the U.S. military toward space and cyberspace in the Building 300 auditorium at Schriever Air Force Base, Colorado, Nov. 13.

"The big question is 'where are we going?'" Grant asked. "There's a focus on developing joint warfighters and the space operations force – you will see a new emphasis on what it means to be a multi-domain space warfighter, and how all of our roles fit into that."

Grant addressed the 50th Space Wing's Mission, Vision and Priorities, and the ever increasing attention on the space and cyberspace warfighting realms.

"You may be wondering what these changes mean for you – fundamentally, we continue to do our jobs and accomplish our mission the way we've been called to do," she said. "Our

A&FRC to host kids table mat decorating

By Senior Airman William Tracy
50th Space Wing Public Affairs

SCHRIEVER AIR FORCE BASE, Colo. — The Airman and Family Readiness Center is hosting a Parent Enrichment Kid’s Table Mat Decorating event 3—4 p.m. Nov. 16 and 10—11 a.m. Nov. 17 at the A&FRC building at Schriever Air Force Base, Colorado.

The event allows parents and children to use their creative side, crafting out their own thanksgiving-themed artwork, from turkeys to cornucopias.

“It provides an opportunity for parents and children to participate in a creative, bonding experience together,” said Cheryl Jensen, A&FRC work life specialist and event organizer.

“Carving out the time isn’t always easy in a parent’s busy life and can take some planning, but the benefits to parent and child alike of spending quality time makes it so worth the time and effort,” added Ruth Moore, A&FRC community readiness consultant.

Each participant will have their own square mat to decorate, using free crafting tools to create their own Thanksgiving decorations, the event ending with a final presentation of everyone’s creations.

“The parents and children can create a mat that is representative of their creative interests,” Jensen said. “Each mat will be unique.”

The decorated squares are not just for looks — they can also be used as place mats for Thanksgiving dinner.

“They can use them, save them or give them to the family,” Moore said. “We are going to laminate them to make it a keepsake.”

This event is part of the Schriever AFB Parent Enrichment Program. The goal of the program is to empower parents and children to create strategies that lead to stronger relationships and higher quality of life for the whole family. “We want to assist parents in their role as a child’s first and most important teacher and to help promote a strong and healthy parent-child relationship,” Moore said.

She said this event comes at an often crucial time for families – the stressful holiday season. Moore believes mat decorating will definitely fulfill this goal of strengthening family relationships, and falls in line with the 50th Space Wing priority of taking care of Airmen and their families always.

“Thanksgiving is always a family affair and a table mat can be the best area to infuse creativity and whimsy into your Thanksgiving décor,” Moore said. “Best of all, the kids can help with any of the crafting, meaning they’ll be beaming with pride when guests finally gather ‘round the table to see their creations.”

Moore said she looks forward to the mat decorating and other parent enrichment classes in the future.

“The Airman and Family Readiness Center strives to build quality of life programs for the Schriever community, we provide activities to help members strike a balance between their professional and personal life,” she said.

“In 2019, the Airman and Family Readiness Center will host more parent enrichment activities throughout the

50th Space Wing Public Affairs

SCHRIEVER AIR FORCE BASE, Colo.—The 50th Space Wing held its biannual Wingman Day at Schriever Air Force Base, Colorado, Nov. 9.

Wingman Day is designed to boost Airmen resiliency through a variety of courses and activities.

Col. Jennifer Grant, 50th SW commander, began the opening ceremony with the question, “Are you guys ready to unleash your superpower?”

“We have an amazing day with a course selection that I think will satisfy everybody in this room,” Grant said. “This day is designed to give us a break so that we are ready to provide for our people and our team.”

“We preach a one-team concept,” Grant continued. “That means everybody at this installation. We’re wingmen, we’re warriors and we take care of each other. If we’re not taking care of each other, how are we going to provide for the mission?”

Grant explained morale-boosting events like Wingman Day and monthly First Friday events give Airmen the opportunity to recharge their batteries.

“Everybody needs a day of rest, everybody needs a respite,” she said.

Grant also emphasized the need to check on Airmen who were unable to attend Wingman Day due to job requirements, which ties back into the 50th SW priority, “Take care of our Airmen and families always.”

“It is really important for us to make sure that we are maintaining our resiliency, and resiliency takes a lot of different forms,” she said. “At the basis of it is the ability to bounce back, regain your form and function.”

Col. Jacob Middleton, 50th Space Wing vice commander, speaks to Airmen during the Wingman Day opening ceremony at Schriever Air Force Base, Colorado, Nov. 9, 2018. Wingman Day provides an opportunity for Airmen to step out of their workplace to spend a day engaging in education as well as team building.

- We all experience hardships
- Resiliency is different for every person
- Connection to people is important
- Everyone has value simply because they exist
- The question is not do you have value but what is your value
- Take care of each other”

Grant emphasized the importance for Airmen to take advantage of days like Wingman Day.

“This gives everyone time to unwind and then do what it is we’re called to do when were called to do it and to have the energy to do those things,” she said.

Col. Jacob Middleton, 50th SW vice commander, then spoke to Airmen, telling stories of his childhood and the hardships he faced.

“We grew up so poor that I would go to school to eat,” he said.

Middleton spoke about his struggles as an Airman at Shaw Air Force Base, South Carolina, where he learned to lean on others.

“Being resilient in something is learning how to keep moving forward and pressing forward when things aren’t going your way,” he said. “You can be more resilient than what you were born into.”

Middleton echoed Grant’s sentiment about taking care of fellow wingmen.

“Look out for the folks that are around you,” he said. “Everybody is watching and you never know who you’re going to help.”

Middleton ended the ceremony with key takeaways Airmen should carry with them:

- We all experience hardships
- Resiliency is different for every person
- Connection to people is important
- Everyone has value simply because they exist
- The question is not do you have value but what is your value
- Take care of each other

“Take this time to relax and unwind,” he concluded.

The morning continued with classes for Airmen, including The Power of Nutrition, The Power of the Brain, How to Meal Prep and Hungry Hungry Hippos among many others.

The Power of the Nutrition addressed topics like eating before, during and after workouts, and how to recover from workouts properly.

“I love teaching about nutrition and that is one of the main reasons I got my degree in it,” said Carol Carr, Schriever AFB health promotions coordinator. “I thought the topic was relevant because Airmen have fitness standards to maintain. I want them to fuel appropriately to get the best performance out of their workout.”

Carr’s favorite part about teaching the class was being able to help others improve their health through nutrition.

“I hope Airmen have increased awareness and knowledge about how what they eat affects many aspects of their lives, or in this case fitness performance,” she said.

The last half of the day was dedicated to unit resiliency time, giving Airmen a break from the office to participate in team building activities like bowling to further strengthen morale and resiliency.

For more information about the next Wingman Day, contact Jess Schroeder, 50th SW community support coordinator, at 567-5726.

Tech. Sgt. Christopher Ash, 22nd Space Operations Squadron noncommissioned officer in charge of infrastructure systems, presents an innovative idea to Col. more data, or perhaps the scope needs to be narrowed.”

The panel recessed at the end to consider the proposals more in depth.

“What happens now is the panel will make a decision on which ones might be able to be acted on immediately, which ideas require more data, and those which might not be approved,”

Allen said.
Overall, Grant said she was pleased with the proposals put forward.
“Ultimately, these ideas help us figure out across the board how we make ourselves a better, lethal, innovative force,” she said.
Allen said the wing plans to hold two iWAR panels per year, one in May and one in November. The results of this panel will be made public by Nov. 16, 2018.
For more information on the program or to submit an idea for the panel’s consideration, contact Allen at 719-567-2780.

All-call mission remains unchanged, our vision and priorities remain unchanged. What we do see in the future is a greater attention to mission sets that reside here at Schriever, which is fantastic as it highlights our mission.”

Additionally, Grant detailed other changes coming to Schriever, including the Colorado Department of Transportation’s effort to improve Highway 94, with one traffic study complete and another underway.

She also highlighted the impact morale events, such as the 50th Force Support Squadron’s monthly First Friday and last week’s Wingman Day, citing the importance of the 50th Space Wing priority of taking care of our Airmen and their families always.

Grant said while space and cyberspace are the core of the 50th SW’s mission, all Schriever Airmen – not just space operations squadron crew workers, but force support personnel, firefighters, defenders and more, contribute to the mission and help Schriever be the epicenter of space.

“We have a diversity of people here with different roles,” Grant said. “We can’t have innovation and integration without everyone playing their part, it’s all part of being a champion team.”

The event featured a question and answer session in which Airmen were encouraged to provide their input on matters throughout the base.

Grant added Airmen can provide their input to base leadership in a more personalized setting through the wing’s Innovative Warfighting Advancing Readiness program, with a panel conducted later in the day and more scheduled for the future.

“iWAR is not a staff package sitting in somebody’s inbox for a long time – it’s base leadership listening to your ideas, how you identify a problem and propose to solve a problem and giving you the funds to go and make it happen,” Grant said.

First Lt. Jonathan Sampson, 50th Mission Support Group executive officer, said the all-call was a great opportunity to hear from base leadership first-hand.

“It feels like leadership is very engaged with where we are at and where we are going to go,” Sampson said. “Laying out the plan for the future of the base and seeing the commander’s perspective is vitally important – it helps align all of us on what we can do to support this transition.”

The all-call concluded with Grant reemphasizing the importance of every Schriever Airman’s role.

“We are one team — every person on base plays a part in accomplishing our mission,” she said. “We will continue to train like we fight, get out there and get the job done.”
