casualties keenly felt, Pentagon spokesman says

A U.S. military spokesman said Monday that the 4,000th U.S. death in Iraq was felt by every single loss of a soldier, sailor, airman or Marine is keenly felt by the department, by military commanders, by families and friends both here and at home, the Pentagon spokesman said.

Whitman said during an informal news conference Monday. Whitman stressed that no casualty is more significant than another. "Each soldier, Marine, sailor or airman is equally precious, and each loss of life is equally tragic," he said.

Whitman called attention to the sacrifices by coalition forces and by Iraqi forces. "Their sacrifices are just as tragic and their contributions are equally valuable," he said. "And our thoughts are with these families also."

Eight U.S. government civilians also have died in Iraq. More than 16,000 U.S. government civilians have been deployed to Iraq since 2003.

Both coalition and Iraqi security force casualties are down significantly from May 2007, Whitman said, and since May 2006, Iraqi civilian casualties also have declined.

Whitman said that al Qaeda in Iraq and other extremists will continue to try to hit coalition troops and indiscriminately kill Iraqi civilians in hopes of breeding a civil war, Whitman said.

There are forces that do not want to see Iraq move forward with a representative government as a peaceful nation, and they can still inflict casualties — both on Iraqi civilians and coalition forces," he told reporters.

Whitman said that suicide bombers continue to try and launch attacks and sometimes succeed. There are gun battles as coalition and Iraqi forces move into new areas and confront the extremists.

The surge strategy has paid off, Whitman said. The surge of five U.S. brigade combat teams, support forces and Marines has provided the space and time needed for local and provincial governments to set up.

It's also given us the time necessary to develop the Iraqi security forces, which now are increasingly taking the lead for these security functions," he said.

Bush marks five-year anniversary of Operation Iraqi Freedom

WASHINGTON — President George W. Bush reflected on the triumphs and tragedies of the Iraq war today, five years after the U.S. ousted Saddam Hussein and roughly one year after a troop surge helped to tamp down violence there.

In the midst of what he referred to as an "understandable debate" over the merits of war and the prospects of U.S. victory, Bush expressed confidence in Operation Iraqi Freedom during a speech at the Pentagon.

"The answers are clear to me," he said. "Removing Saddam Hussein from power was the right decision, and this is a fight America can and must win."

Five years ago, tens of thousands of U.S. troops aided by "the most effective and precise air campaign in history" poured across Iraq's border to topple Saddam's ruthless dictatorship, Bush said. Since then, 12 million Iraqis have defied terrorism and cast votes in free Iraqi elections.

"The liberation of Iraq took incredible skill and amazing courage," he said. "And the speed, precision and brilliant execution of the campaign will be studied by military historians for years to come."

Meanwhile, however, progress in Iraq was undermined by al Qaeda attacks against innocent civilians, a harbinger of the brutality extremists would replicate in the United States if given the ABOARD USS FORT MCHENRY — Marines and sailors participating in Western Africa Training Cruise 08, a landmark sea-basing proof-of-concept exercise, have just completed their first phase of maneuvers off the coast of Monrovia, Liberia, March 21.

The WATC 08 exercise is being held March 17 to April 5 in concert with the ongoing African Partnership Station deployment with a focus on the delivery of humanitarian assistance supplies to various clinics and schools in Monrovia, Liberia from a sea-based command.

Marines from 4th Landing Support Battalion, 4th Marine Logistics Group, completed the first phase by transferring vehicles and equipment from the maritime prepositioning ships, USNS 2nd Lt. John Bobo and USNS Lance Cpl. Roy M. Wheat, to the USS Fort McHenry.

With the help of the Navy's Naval Beach Group Two, 19 Marines of 4th LSB employed new concepts and equipment during the exercise designed to evaluate the progress of the sea basing model.

"This sea basing portion is designed to take future operational concepts and execute them using today's platforms," said Michael Harvey, prepositioning officer, U.S. Marine Corps Forces Europe. "We are taking equipment that was originally designed for ship-to-shore movement and we are using it as a ship-to-ship connector."

Assisted by their naval counterparts, the Marines' mission was to transfer seven Marine Corps vehicles embarked on the USNS 2nd Lt. John Bobo of the Maritime Preposition Squadron One, to the Navy's new Improved Navy Lighterage System. The INLS is a system of floating causeways designed to move equipment from ship-to-shore. After a short ride on the INLS, the Marines drove the vehicles from the INLS platforms directly into the well deck of the USS Fort McHenry, KANDAHAR PROVINCE, Afghanistan — Somewhere over Afghanistan, Capt. Rick Sofge's heart jumped a beat; his accompanying crew's eyes fixed on a small paved landing strip appearing around the corner from a sprawling mountain chain.

"We train for it, you expect it, you know it is going to look small, it is going to look weird and you are going to go 'whew,'" said Sofge, KC-130 Hercules aircraft commander, Marine Medium Helicopter Squadron 365 (reinforced), 24th Marine Expeditionary Unit, NATO International Security Assistance Force. Part thrill ride, part freight train, the Marine airplane banks and descends to the patch of paved desert. There is no stopping now; seconds before wheels touch the dusty ground a slight pull on the controls and the plane soars safely into the clouds.

This was only a test of the crew's ability to adapt to new landscape. "The terrain is a gigantic issue when you are landing at a higher altitude, which changes the performance of our airplanes," said Sofge.

Each of these flights is another chance to try a new airfield or talk to a different nation's radio operator. While all countries share the same basic rules of the sky, each nation may have different expectations of the arriving pilots, crew and cargo, said Maj. Scott Madziarczyk, chief intratheater airlift system, Joint Transportation System, NATO-ISAF.

"When you get on the ground and move cargo, different nations are able to do different things due to national caveats," he said. Fitting in among the multinational force has other benefits for the KC-130 crew, a chance to do things peers in Iraq only dream about.

"I think we would all like to do everything our platform is capable

Exploring deployment safety

Semper Safe

Conditions and situations that can tax even the most seasoned leader's skills thrive in our Marine Corps today, situations such as uncertain world situations, multiple training/real-world missions and back-to-back deployments to theaters of operation.

In the midst of all these changes and uncertainties, leadership still encompasses the responsibility of ensuring the combat readiness of our Marine Corps and the safety of our service members.

Safe operations depend upon effective command and control. Leaders are multi-tasked with administrative and command responsibilities associated with running a unit as well as finding time to be present with their units during training evolutions to help them identify where the unit is at risk.

Whether it's a training mission or a real-world combat mission, leaders can make a huge difference in their unit's safety performance by being actively involved in the planning, preparation, and execution of the mission. In deployment situations individuals often abandoned safety in an effort to establish "combat readiness."

Recommendations to confront this mindset:

- Ensure that all personnel know and use the Operational Risk Management process in every military operation.
- Establish a command climate from the outset that promotes safety. Begin by establishing a safety network and designating safety personnel.
- Train all Marines and sailors to a standard.
- Enforce established standards and require all personnel to perform to standard in every operation.
- Deploy safety personnel with the advance party.
- Develop unit training programs that aid in identifying operational hazards.

• Establish a deployment library and take essential maintenance, operational and training regulations as well as publications.

• Operate according to the combat walk-run philosophy, especially an unfamiliar environment.

• Conduct detailed planning mission briefings regardless of unit's experience.

Leaders and supervisors: every leader's goal to accomplish the mission at hand without injuries or fatalities. Although safety is the commander's program, it's everyone's responsibility. An effective safety program incorporates management, effective leadership and discipline, all of this depends on you. For more information contact your Unit Safety Officer or Safety Representative. A "Lee Guide" is available at the Camp Lejeune's Safety Division Web at: <https://intranet.mcieast.usmc.mil/CS/Documents/default.aspx>

Combat pay can count toward economic stimulus payment eligibility

WASHINGTON — Military personnel serving in combat zones have the option of including their nontaxable combat pay on their 2007 or 2008 income tax returns if it helps their eligibility for the 2008 economic stimulus payments.

To receive the stimulus payment this year, combat zone personnel or their spouses must file a 2007 income tax return by Oct. 15. Otherwise, they can claim the economic stimulus payment on next year's income tax return.

"The last thing we want our troops in Iraq or other war zones to worry about are their tax returns. But we do want the troops, and their families stateside, to know they may qualify for the economic stimulus payment," said Linda E. Stiff, acting commissioner of the Internal Revenue Service.

Starting in May, the IRS will issue economic stimulus payments of up to $600 ($1,200 for married couples) plus a $300 payment for each qualifying child younger than 17. The payments are based on 2007 income tax returns. The payments for individuals will begin to phase out starting at $75,000 in adjusted gross income.

Even individuals and families who normally do not file a tax return because they have no filing requirement may qualify for an economic stimulus payment. They may be eligible for the minimum payment of $300 ($600 for married couples) plus the $300 for each qualifying child younger than 17.

People must have at least $3,000 in qualifying income to get a payment. Qualifying income is defined as any combination of earned income (such as wages or taxable income from self-employment), nontaxable combat pay and certain benefits from Social Security, Veterans Affairs and Railroad Retirement.

Military personnel who normally would not file an income tax return because their 2007 income is not taxable can file a simple Form 1040A with the IRS if they want to receive the economic stimulus payment. They should report their nontaxable combat pay on Line 40b of the Form 1040A to show at least $3,000 in qualifying income. The Department of Defense lists the amount of excluded combat pay, along with the designation, "Code Q," in Box 12 of Forms W-2.

If a military person is serving in a combat zone, his or her normal tax filing requirement is extended until at least 180 days after leaving a combat zone. However, spouses or others with a power of attorney can prepare and file a 2007 income tax return on their behalf so that the stimulus payment is received this year.

The IRS has developed Package 1040A-3, an 8-page publication containing tax tips, a sample form 1040A and a blank Form 1040A.

To ensure that a stimulus payment will be received in 2008, the return must be filed by Oct. 15 to allow sufficient time for processing.

There are a number of special tax code provisions that apply to members of the military serving in combat zones. They include:

All military pay earned by listed personnel or warrant officers is excluded from gross income.

Monthly pay of up to $6,866 earned by commissioned officers is excluded from 2007 gross income.

All military pay earned by listed personnel hospitalized because of injuries sustained in a combat zone is excluded from gross income during the period of hospitalization. The exclusion is limited to two years after the date of termination of combatant activities in the combat zone.

Commissioned officers hospitalized because of injuries sustained in a combat zone have a maximum exclusion of $6,866 for 2007 and have the same year limitation.

Military personnel who miss a tax filing deadline because they are in a combat zone have 180 days after they leave that combat zone to file a tax return, if they have a power of attorney.

All the provisions also apply to members of the reserves and National Guard.

The IRS reminds filers that they can get their stimulus payment faster by using direct deposit when they file their tax return.

In addition, the IRS urges people to file electronically. For people who normally are not required to file a tax return, the IRS and the Free File Alliance have a special program set up to allow for electronic filing. For those with computer access, IRS Free File - Economic Stimulus Payments is available at IRS.gov.

Arrive Alive Program saves lives

Cpl. Patrick Fleischman
MCB Public Affairs

In a Department of Defense worldwide survey taken every two years, the Marine Corps leads all military services in alcohol use.

Combating this issue Headquarters and Support Battalion, Marine Corps Base provides Arrive Alive cards to all of its Marines and sailors and is offering it as an option to any service member who needs safe transportation to Camp Lejeune.

The program provides a card that lists cab companies that will take the Marine back to base where the Officer of the Day at Bldg 60 will provide payment of the fare from a fund.

"It's about a young guy having an option after consuming alcohol, running out of money or having their designated driver becomes the 'least drunk driver' to get back to the base safely," said Col. David R. Leppelmeier, commanding officer of the battalion.

The fund of $160, enough money for a cab ride back from Wilmington or Moorehead City, was created from donations from staff non-commissioned officers and officers.

However, this is not a hand out, said Leppelmeier. Marines are expected to pay back the OOD no later than three days after use.

There are no consequences for use of the program if you are 21 years or older, he said. "We had two Marines use it...came back the next day, and paid the OOD back with out any repercussions."

Underage drinking is punishable by the Uniform Code of Military Justice and will be prosecuted accordingly, said Leppelmeier. But if a Marine younger than 21 drank, "he already made one bad and discipline-requiring decision [by underage drinking] that night, but if he uses the card it will save him a possibly fatal second bad decision by getting behind the wheel of a car."

If you don't have an Arrive Alive card cut the one from the front page, and put it in your wallet or stop by building 59 and pick one up, it could not only save your career - it could save your life.

Call the OOD at 451-3382 for a list of cab companies.

Personnel using this service will repay the OOD for the total cost associated no later than three (3) days after use.

This card can be used by ANY service member aboard Camp Lejeune!

CBIRF Marines train to protect the homeland

Leslie Palmer
Expeditionary Force

ANDOVER, Md. — Marines and sailors with Company B, Chemical Biological Incident Response Force, II Expeditionary Force, honed their skills during training exercise Feb. 28, at Washington Metropolitan Area Transit Authority in Andover, Md.

During the training, service members enhanced their emergency lifesaving skills and decontamination and extraction techniques, in preparation for a real-world chemical, biological, radiological, nuclear or high-yield explosive incident.

The transit authority and CBIRF worked closely to ensure the scenarios resembled lifelike events, with special attention given to simulated casualties. Because of this, the training was like none CBIRF has done.

"It's no longer an average operation for CBIRF," said Chief Warrant Officer Andrew Hilliard, unit training manager for Headquarters and Service Company, CBIRF. "These casualties are actually schooled on what their signs and symptoms are and how they're supposed to act. We put some mild rouge on them to make them [appear blue], and we gave them anti-acid tablets so they would foam at the mouth. Some had shortness of breath, some couldn't walk and others were weak, which indicates a family of possible chemical or biological agents."

Casualties were strategically placed in the Metro tunnel, simulating a bomb explosion. Then, Marines and sailors set up a decontamination line and medical stability tent outside the tunnel. Next, the Marines extracted the casualties from the tunnel and gave the wounded medical care in the contaminated area as needed. The simulated victims were then transported to the decontamination line and medical stability tent for follow-on care.

"It took them a long time to get me out [of the tunnel]," said Josh Dale, a simulated casualty during the operation. "They did a good job. They put me on a [stretcher], brought me out to [a multi-purpose vehicle], and got me to the decontamination line quickly. Then, I got evaluated by the medical staff. It ran pretty smoothly."

CBIRF is self-sustainable during a CBRNE incident, equipped with many entities including technical rescue, decontamination and advanced medical care. To use CBIRF to its full capacity, training must be constant.

"We have to be able to do our job in a minute's notice, because we never know when we're going to get the call," said Cpl. Shaneil Mitchell, a flash heater operator from Company B. "We have to do a lot of training to stay on our toes."

CBIRF has a unique mission focusing on saving lives during a CBRNE incident, Hilliard said. They extract casualties from incident sites and transport them to safety, where they can get decontaminated and receive follow-on medical care. So, Marines and sailors with the unit must know how to operate in a contaminated environment, while wearing their personal protective equipment.

24th MEU puts expeditionary planning to ultimate test

Tandall A. Clinton
By

KANDAHAR PROVINCE, Afghanistan — As the 24th Marine Expeditionary Unit prepares for spectrum operations to support NATO's International Security Assistance Force, clouds of dust, remnants of a sandstorm, rise a corner of their base. A flurry of construction activity is underway to accommodate the more than 20,000 Marines and their equipment.

From the 24th MEU's main combat element's perimeter, Gunnery Sgt. Dan West, maintenance noncommissioned officer in charge, Marine Medium Helicopter Squadron 365 (Reinforced), 24th MEU, ISAF, reflects on the hectic change at the NATO base. "Where that tent city is being set up [is] somewhat east of just a barren field full of rocks," West explained. "It's looking a lot crowded with structures for Marines to sleep, eat and bathe. Within a month they have constructed that whole area, connected all the services, wired all our work spaces and started work on two flight lines."

The flight line improvements demonstrate the 24th MEU's ability to quickly arrive in an area and operate with minimal infrastructure. Instead of pouring concrete or other time-consuming activities, Marines employ an interlocking system of panels on which aircraft can park or land.

Fresh off a tour in Iraq, Marines from Marine Wing Support Squadron 271 mated each slab of matting into place, creating a runway for the 24th MEU's aircraft.

"We build runways and landing pads that can be laid down within a week," said Cpl. Shaun Kicic, expeditionary airfield technician, MWSS 271, Marine Wing Support Squadron 27, 2nd Marine Air Wing. "We have a deadline when they want to park their aircraft, so our biggest concern is meeting that deadline."

With each swing of a hammer, another tile snaps into place and the 400,000 sq. ft. runway inches toward that deadline. Almost as soon as the Marines create breathing room, more aircraft are looking for a place to park — most recently a group of AV-8B II Harriers. They now rest on a 96,000 sq. ft. strip the Marines pieced together over three 16-hour days in the sun, sand and wind.

and emergency services officer, MWSS 271. "They push through it like Marines do; it's not an easy job, but they are probably the best at it."

The airfield operation is similar in technique to what his Marines did in Iraq and back home, only on a much larger scale.

"From what I am being told, it is the largest solid connect pad that any expeditionary airfield [unit] has done," said Whitebear.

Like the men who laid railroads across the country, allowing unprecedented transcontinental travel, these Marines know their efforts are key to transportation.

During a pause in the pounding, one Marine reflected on their importance to the 24th MEU's mission. "This is the first step to get aircraft in the air so they can support the Marines on the ground," said Sgt. Cody Gonzales, expeditionary airfield technician, MWSS 271.

By quickly creating their own air strip, the Marines won't disrupt other air operations on the base when all the aircraft arrive, a surprising feat considering the size of the arriving Marine force.

"We are going to have the most aircraft out here of any squadron on base," West said.

The tent city, noticeable from the flight line expansion, is further proof of the Marines' large, yet temporary presence.

Over the past month, 2nd Lt. Gregory Procaccini, combat engineer officer, Combat Logistics Battalion 24, 24th MEU, ISAF, has overseen the transformation of a minefield to a Marine camp.

"We didn't have any idea of what we were going to have when we got here," he said.

Proving that all tents are not created equal, Procaccini arrived to find the Air Force's interpretation of tents much more palatable than those Marines are accustomed to. After arriving, he was greeted by an Air Force unit bearing supplies to create a mini-city and teams of civilian contractors ready to set it up.

"It's a package deal. They [the tents called Harvest Falcon II] come with the air conditioner unit, the lights, the ducting, flooring, power generation, showers, latrine units — they all came with the package as well as piping, water bags and fuel bags," Procaccini said.

Included in this package were even expert technicians from the 49th Material Maintenance Group. Air Force Chief Master Sgt. Richard Sheridan, chief enlisted manager, 49th MMG, roams the camp making sure his fellow American service members' new home is up to par.

"You have a small city here. We have a power plant so they don't have to worry (Above) Marines with MWSS 271, attached to the 24th Marine Expeditionary Unit, NATO International Security Assistance Force, lay down AM2 matting while in Kandahar province, Afghanistan. This AM2 matting will be essential in the support of aircraft while conducting operations in support of NATO. (Right) A Marine with MWSS 271, adds another piece to the 96,000 sq. ft. about power issues. Every single tent has air conditioning so you can keep comfortable even when it is 110 degrees out here. We even built a chow hall out here so you don't need to go anywhere else to eat," he explained. "Everything you need is right here."

"We are here to help the Marines get set up and go take care of the bad guys. When you are here with the comforts of home it should give you some respite from the mountains," said Sheridan. Simply put, "a place to rest your feet and not step in mud."

The Marines will only be here for a limited duration. The Marines must find a balance between the amount of infrastructure needed to conduct operations and their finite timeline.

"Our footprint when we leave will be minimal, because we have put in no hard structures," explained West.

Even the permanent-looking flight line additions will all be taken apart in the same piece-by-piece fashion when the Marines leave.

"We can go in somewhere lay it [flight line additions] down really fast, use it, and pick it up without anyone ever knowing it was here," Gonzales said.

When the time comes, the expansive tent city created for the Marines will eventually be torn down, rolled up and shipped out and the harsh, sandy wind the structures once protected Marines from will erase any remnants of the Marines having resided there.

CLB-1 engineers start seven-month tour

Cpl. Ben Eberle
1st Marine Logistics Group

HAWAS, Iraq — A routine mission for combat engineers usually involves large concrete barriers and concertina wire, but recently they dropped off much more precious commodities here ... Marines.

The engineers, utility specialists and heavy-equipment operators with Company C, Combat Logistics Battalion 1, 1st Marine Logistics Group, are based out of Camp Fallujah and provide infrastructure and personnel support throughout Al Anbar province.

A convoy operation early March 7 morning confirmed this when the company moved five of their highly specialized Marines to Hawas, a small forward operating base near Ramadi.

Four of them will maintain the base's water purification system. Cpl. Nestor H. Ramirez, a generator mechanic with the company, will ensure the system has the power it needs to pump clean water to the FOB.

"I feel comfortable about going," said Ramirez, 20, from Orange County, Calif.

He knew he'd be the only generator mechanic at the base but said he's not concerned with tackling the assignment.

"It's all stuff I've done before," Ramirez said.

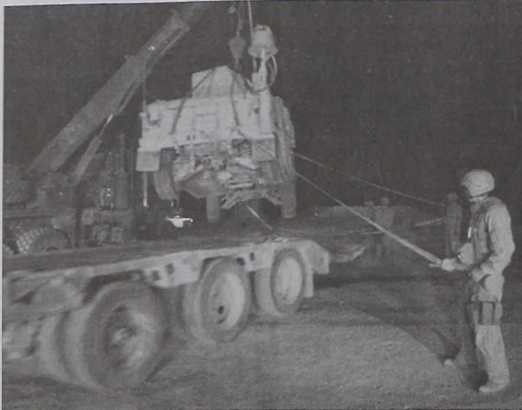

The five Marines are planning to stay at FOB Hawas for the duration of their deployment.

More than 100 Marines and sailors with Co. C deployed to Camp Fallujah in mid-February and expect to be involved in a variety of missions over the next six months.

They build and repair roads, install force-protection barriers and maintain utilities for FOBs and checkpoints in and around Fallujah.

Along with providing personnel support in Hawas, they also swapped a generator and recovered a downed Humvee. It's the type of mission they're likely to see again, but not one they're limited to.

As the theater around them changes, so does the company's objective. The level of violence in the once-volatile Anbar province continues to plummet, and engineers have begun to demilitarize certain communities by removing the same concrete barriers and concertina wire they once worked diligently to put in place.

Staff Sgt. Alfredo M. Arano, motor-transportation chief with Co. C and convoy commander during March 7's mission, said the shift in objective is something he looks forward to supporting.

"We aim to reinforce or rebuild the structures already out there," said Arano, 33, from Las Vegas. "But we also want to help the Iraqis take their country back."

At the end of the 10-hour night mission to FOB Hawas, the sun was climbing the morning sky and the Marines were ready for a hard-earned nap. Arano congratulated them on a job well done. He went over their strengths and touched on some things to improve.

They'll have the next six months to work out the details.

Pfc. Brandon M. Loudenback, 21, from Fort Laramie, Ohio, hammers a nail while Lance Cpl. David R. Kettenring, 25, from Bremerton, Wash., holds a plank in place. The two combat engineers are deployed to Iraq with Company C, Combat Logistics Battalion 1, 1st Marine Logistics Group, and recently helped build a new cardio fitness room at Camp Fallujah. The company started planning the project shortly after arriving late February. They also made improvements to the adjacent weight room. The battalion held an informal ribbon-cutting ceremony for the fitness centers March 10. Cpl. Ben Eberle

FALLUJAH, Iraq — An informal ribbon-cutting ceremony for a new fitness center took place here March 10, where recently deployed Marines and sailors have hit the ground running — literally.

"All right, I need to go work out," said Maj. Damian A. Bess, seconds after the ceremony. He's the executive officer for Headquarters Company, Combat Logistics Battalion 1, 1st Marine Logistics Group, and was one of the first to give the new-and-improved fitness center a try.

Combat engineers with Company C, CLB-1, took on the task of building the cardio room, giving their peers a designated place for treadmills, bicycles and elliptical machines.

The air-conditioned building will help service members maintain cardiovascular fitness during the upcoming summer, when temperatures top 120 degrees.

"It's going to be great, the Marines can stay fit year round," said 1st Sgt. Leveta S. Smith, first sergeant for Company C. "They really did a great job on this project."

They also renovated the existing weight room by repairing broken equipment with spare parts they found on site.

"It's a morale booster for all of our Marines," said Sgt. Ronnie C. Mills, 28, from Barbour, Ky. He's one of the squad leaders for Engineer Platoon, Company C, and helped oversee the construction of the new cardio room.

"This is my third deployment here, and I've seen that things I built the first time are still standing," Mills said. "It feels good to see these structures withstanding the test of time."

He said the quality of his team's work is always improving and expects the cardio room to be enjoyed for years to come.

Maintenance Marines keep coalition forces rolling

Cpl. Ben Eberle
1st Marine Logistics Group

FALLUJAH-Iraq — The grumble of engines and whine of power tools requires everyone to talk a little louder here. Marines in dirty coveralls move from one piece of machinery to the next, turning wrenches, popping hoods and running complex diagnostic tests.

The busy tent city sprawling over several acres at Camp Fallujah is the new home for more than a hundred Marines with Maintenance Company, Combat Logistics Battalion 1, 1st Marine Logistics Group. They deployed here late February to relieve CLB-8.

Approximately 100 Marines in the company provide direct support to the infantry battalions in Regimental Combat Team 1, 1st Marine Division. They also support other units and organizations at Camp Fallujah, as well as military and police transit teams working with the Iraqi Security Forces around Fallujah.

If it breaks, chances are good they'll have a hand in fixing it.

They repair everything from field radios and training devices to rifle scopes and Mine Resistant Ambush Protected vehicles, said Gunnery Sgt. Ronald Manning, a 39-year-old from Corbin, Ky. and maintenance chief for 2nd Platoon, Maintenance Company.

Their three-day changeover with CLB-8 went smoothly, Manning said. The Marines in the company were able to make a seamless transition, picking up right where the outgoing unit left off.

"We have the same equipment out here as we do at Camp Pendleton, Calif.," said Cpl. James A. Steele, a mechanic with 1st Platoon. "And we're able to do organic and intermediate maintenance."

The Marine Corps categorizes maintenance into four echelons, or levels. The first level covers preventative maintenance, such as checking fluids and keeping the equipment clean. This is the responsibility of the individual operator.

Maintenance Company handles "intermediate" and "organic" maintenance, which are the second and third levels. This includes everything from basic troubleshooting to major components, such as engine replacements.

"We have the general policy that we don't go home at night until everything is complete," Manning said. "At the start of the day, we've already completed everything we had come in the day before, so we actually have to wait for the first customer — the first vehicle — to drive through (with a request)."

If the equipment's in such disrepair that it needs rebuilding, it's sent to the fourth level of maintenance and is shipped to Camp Taqaddum, Manning said.

The Marines of Maintenance Company not only maintain and repair gear, they improve it.

Sgt. Michael S. Blount, a quality control specialist with 1st Platoon, is the duty expert on the new "survivability kits" being added to the Marine Corps seven-ton, personnel trucks.

"It's purpose is exactly what its name implies," said Blount, 23, from Vancouver, Wash. "It increases the survivability of the vehicle and the passengers inside."

Blount is the noncommissioned officer in charge of an Intermediate Maintenance Activity (IMA) team responsible for adding armor to the truck. They also add plates to the brake and drive-train components, allowing the vehicle "to take a hit and maintain mobility and control," Blount said.

In the event that an IED attack damages the fuel tank, the kit deploys an absorbent foam to avoid potentially explosive hazards.

Many Marines in the company are on their first deployment, and some of those working with MRAPs did so for the first time in Iraq. Having a good team of civilians and the ability to fall back on general vehicle knowledge has helped the Marine mechanics make necessary adjustments.

Steele is expecting to perform routine maintenance on quite a few MRAPs during his seven-month tour. "I knew pretty much everything after three or four days," said Steele, a 20-year-old from O'Fallon, Ill.

Imagine what he'll know in three or four months.

That attitude from the squadron ... is music to Madziarczyk's ear. ... "The day before they called me, I ... was walking around wishing I had ... another aircraft," he explained. ... "They moved gear for darn near ev- ... ery nation that is here with ISAF. ... Intramural basketball champs go undefeated

Jamie Cameron
Assistant managing editor

It is accurate to say the Marines of II Marine Expeditionary Force Headquarters-Reserve Integration Division are playing basketball at a higher level than anyone else aboard Camp Lejeune. That could not have been more evident March 20, when H-RID #2 beat H-RID 68-64 for the intramural championship.

"We wanted to have one team, but we ended up having to split it into two," said Bill Holmes, head coach for H-RID and, on occasion, Team 2 as well. "It didn't work out exactly the way we planned and both of these teams lost players who made the All-Marine Basketball Team, but we sure kept it in the family."

In keeping it in the family the H-RID teams beat every other team in the intramural league. Team 2 went undefeated and H-RID lost just once in the regular season and twice in the play-offs (always to Team 2).

"They just dominated the league," said Marine Corps Community Services Intramural Sports Director Antonio Warner of the H-RID teams. "They definitely deserved to be in the championship."

The game opened with both teams playing controlled basketball — like two prize-fighters circling each other in their third rematch. The H-RID offense keyed on getting the ball to Hunter Brockind down in the paint and, more often than not, kicking it back out to one of the guards for an open jump shot. Team 2 had seen this tactic before and was effective in denying the pass down low and creating turnovers in the process.

By the end of the half, however, H-RID managed enough offense to open a 33-27 lead over Team 2.

Sensing an opening, H-RID poured on the offense to open the second half. Within five minutes they extended their lead to 10 points and appeared to be on the verge of breaking the game open to force a second, do-or-die contest to decide the championship. The offensive spark went out as quickly as it had come for H-RID and the team suddenly went cold just as Team 2 found its rhythm. Team 2 quickly erased H-RID's advantage and laid claim to its first lead in the second half at 43-42 with just under 12 minutes to go.

In the ensuing see-saw battle, each club sought to get separation. It almost happened with the game tied at 52 when H-RID's John Brown sank a 3-pointer and was fouled in the process. He turned the opportunity into a rare 4-point play and a 56-52 H-RID lead, but it didn't last.

With just under two minutes to play, Team 2 re-took the lead at 61-60, thanks in large part

Hope springs eternal; sea mullet have arrived

Lejeune Outdoors
By Jamie Cameron

With a short cool spell earlier in the week now given way to more spring-like temperatures, we have hopefully passed the point of no return for winter's lingering influence.

Warmer air temperatures and sunny days quickly translate into warmer water temperatures and that means the variety of fish and their willingness to bite is growing as the season progresses.

After a semi-successful shad fishing trip on the Neuse River a couple of weeks ago (everyone in the boat caught fish except me) reports now put the shad run at its peak. Richard Ehrenkauser, a.k.a. Dr. Bogus, reports the Roanoke River is really the place to be, with 50- to 100-fish days a possibility. Closer to base, shad are also being caught in the Neuse and Tar rivers.

There are two species of shad making the spring spawning run — hickory and American shad. Hickories are generally more abundant, but run quite a bit smaller than their American cousins. Most shad fishermen release their catch, as the fish are notoriously bony. I tried my hand with a medium-sized hickory shad we decided to keep during our recent trip and I must say I will henceforth release all future shad. I had been warned going into the project that hickory shad were tough to deal with, but they could be prepared adequately by smoking. I fired up the smoker and soaked some hickory chips (which I thought was especially appropriate) and cured my experimental fish for 45 minutes or so. On the outside, everything looked good to go, but my mood changed rapidly as I attempted to separate the meat from the bones — it seemed like there were thousands of them. After spending half an hour painstakingly picking out the bones, I was left with a disappointing bowl of fish flakes, which I served as an appetizer on crackers. The final analysis — good fish, but not good enough to do it again.

Thankfully, other, more-tasty species are starting to make their first appearance of the spring. According to Dr. Bogus, activity on the piers is starting to include catches of sea mullet and bluefish. There are also, of course, the usual cold water suspects like skates, spiny dogfish and pufferfish.

Boat anglers are also finding the first sheepshead of the year turning up around the shallow water artificial reefs and rock bottoms.

On the other side of the barrier islands, gray trout are moving into the inlets and deeper holes in the sounds. These close-relatives of the speckled trout are generally caught on or near the bottom and prefer some sort of natural bait in the presentation. One tried-and-true method for grays is to take a weighted speck rig and tip the jigs with small pieces of shrimp.

Speckled trout and red drum are still around, but they appear to be transitioning from their winter spots up in the rivers and creeks down to their spring habitats closer to the ocean.

Out in the deep, deep, yellowfin tuna fishing has been slow, but the king mackerel bite has taken up the slack, at least for the time being. The best mackerel action has been around West Rock and 240 Rock — approximately 25 miles south of Beaufort Inlet.

It won't be long now before the spring fishing season truly starts. Make sure your gear is in working condition and ready to go. There aren't many weekends of inactivity left for the true sportsman.

Cal RB announces plans

News report
The Associated Press

BERKELEY, Calif. — California running James Montgomery announced his intention to transfer leaving the Golden Bears without their most experienced healthy tailback heading into spring practice.

Montgomery rushed for 171 yards and two touchdowns last season as a freshman while playing behind senior Justin Forsett and fellow freshman Jahvid Best, excelled as a rusher and a receiver.

With Best sidelined until training camp with a serious hip injury, Montgomery was listed as starting tailback heading into spring ball on March 27. But Montgomery was in for a year of heavy competition with the Golden Bears' talented stable of running backs including touted recruit Covaughn DeBoskie.

"James Montgomery asked for his release, and we granted it," Cal coach Jeff Tedford said. "He felt there would be a better situation for him somewhere. Fortunately for us, running back is a position with a lot of depth. We feel great about our talent at position with Jahvid Best, Shave Vereen, Tracy Smith and Covaughn DeBoskie."

Tedford has produced a 1,000-yard rusher in each of his six seasons at Cal. Two of his tailbacks — Marshall Lynch and J.J. Arrington — were early-round NFL picks, and Forsett is expected to be drafted next month.

Coming home: Falcons sign Denver kicker Jason Elam

Pat Graham
AP sports writer

The Atlanta Falcons have agreed to terms with Jason Elam, the record-setting kicker who is leaving Denver after 15 seasons with the Broncos.

The 38-year-old Elam confirmed the four-year, $9 million deal in a telephone conversation.

He had been Denver's kicker since 1993, but he's coming home in a sense. He played high school football in suburban Atlanta.

"It was a decision I put a lot of thought into," Elam said. "I'm excited to be back in my hometown, although it's bittersweet. I'll be really sad to leave Denver. It's been awesome. But I'm excited about the next chapter."

Elam said he spent many sleepless nights weighing the decision of whether to remain with Denver or sign with Atlanta. What finally won him over was the Falcons' devotion to him.

Elam and coach Mike Shanahan have been trading phone messages all day. The kicker wanted to let his coach know that he appreciated his time in Denver.

"I'm going to miss Denver. It's a parting of ways, but it's a good parting. This is a new beginning and I'm fired up."

Elam has reached 100 points in each of his 15 seasons and ranks fifth on the career list with 395 field goals and sixth in points with 1,786.

"We're extremely excited to add a kicker of Jason's caliber," new Atlanta coach Mike Smith said. "He's a proven winner in this league and we are happy that he chose to become a Falcon."

Elam finished last season with 15 consecutive field goals and kicked four game-winners, the most in the NFL since 1990. He also surpassed John Elway for most games in Broncos history last season.

"I never dreamed of a 15-year career, let alone with one team," Elam said. "I had a great experience. They had a tough decision to make. They were looking at me going into my 16th year and thinking, 'Do we really want to invest a lot more in him?'"

Elam had a feeling the end was near several weeks ago and has been slowly gathering his personal items from his locker at Dove Valley. It was also a chance for him to say farewell to some of his teammates.

"Fifteen years in Denver — I have no complaints whatsoever," Elam said. "I don't think I could've scripted my career any better."

The Falcons used 47-year-old Morten Andersen the last two seasons, but he doesn't have Elam's range. Andersen, the leading scorer and field goal kicker in NFL history, will have to find another team in his quest to become the league's first 50-year-old player.

The signing of Elam was yet another major move by the Falcons, who are trying to remake their roster under Smith and new general manager Thomas Dimitroff.

Free fishing trip planned for service members

by Jamie Cameron
Staff Managing Editor

Have you ever caught your day-dreaming about reeling in the big one?

A Wilmington-based group of military supporters and volunteers has formed Military Appreciation Day Inc. to help active-duty and reserve military members and their families do just that. The non-profit group plans to hold its third annual Military Appreciation Day event June 14 in Morehead City, N.C. And these guys want to show their appreciation for the commitment and sacrifice of those in military service, it means taking them fishing.

Last year, more than 250 active-duty members were invited aboard 80 personally-owned boats for a day of fishing North Carolina's sounds and offshore waters, free of charge. Back at the docks, successful fishing catches off-loaded gamefish of various types, including king mackerel, bluefish, mahi mahi, grouper, snapper and sea bass.

This year, Military Appreciation Day Inc. is looking for an even bigger turnout for and even bigger event.

Media Director Steve Stevens said the registration period opened March 15 and will run through May 25. Those interested need only go online to www.militaryappreciationday.org and sign-up. "We've already had a pretty good flow of sign-ups," said Stevens. "We've set a goal of 1,000 participants for this year's event."

With this year's Military Appreciation Day set to take place along the Morehead City waterfront, organizers hope to bring a greater public awareness to the service members and their families stationed in Eastern North

At the last Military Appreciation Day event, Marines and sailors took to the high seas in search of the big one. Navy corpsman Cart Town found him in this 27-pound American red snapper. Sign-up online for this year's event. Jamie Cameron

Carolina. "We've been looking for a place that would be more accessible to the public," explained Stevens. "A place where people could come by and just shake hands with some of these service members and thank them for what they do. The city of Morehead City has been great to us — offering the use of two waterfront parks for our barbecue and entertainment events."

Even those military members and their dependents who are not interested in fishing are invited to participate. The day will include land-based activities, including musical entertainment and sight-seeing around the historic port. "These families sacrifice just as much as the service members do," said Stevens. "We'll have plenty of things to do for non-anglers and small children while we wait for the anglers to get back to the docks."

One of last year's participants felt so moved by the time and effort Military Appreciation Day Inc. volunteers put in to making the event a success, he wrote: "I would like to take this time to thank you and your entire staff for the time taken to pull off the event. It is a feeling that is hard to describe, knowing as well as seeing the amount of appreciation that our community has for us. It is very easy to say 'We support our troops,' but you and all of the great people that came together on their free time really shows the quote to be true. Again thank you for your support."

It's a sentiment Stevens and the rest of the Military Appreciation Day Inc. workers strive to earn from everyone who participates. "Our goal is to show them how much we value their service and thank those who serve America."

Marines compete in St. Patrick's Day Game

Marines row a Zodiac Inflatable Raft during the St. Patrick's Day Field Meet March 18. The field meet was a way for the Marines and sailors of 8th Engineer Support Battalion to celebrate the life of St. Patrick, who is the patron saint of engineers. The Zodiac boat race was an event where Marines raced on foot while carrying the rafts and then continued racing across a small pond.

Marines from 8th Engineer Support Battalion, 2nd Marine Logistics Group, held a St. Patrick's Day Field Meet March 18.

The field meet was a way for the Marines and sailors of 8th ESB to celebrate the life of St. Patrick, the patron saint of engineers. Patrick is credited with fostering the development of clay buildings and masonry in Ireland.

"Every St. Patrick's Day, engineers take time out and remember their heritage," said Daniel P. O'Hora, commanding officer, 8th ESB, 2nd MLG. "The field meet gives us the opportunity to do that."

Nine events made up the field meet, pitting five of the battalion's companies against each other in competition. Events included a one-mile relay race, a Blarney Stone toss and various events that pertained to the engineers' military occupational specialties.

"We are naturally competitive," said Charles Flynn, with the battalion's Motor Transport Section. "This competition allows us to get away from our regular work day and participate in some motivating P.T. You also get part of the day off and some good chow."

The competition was held at a time when the battalion was reunited after deployments and at its full strength.

"This has been the first time in a year where we have been able to get the battalion together as a whole," O'Hora said.

At the end of the day the battalion held a cookout where Marines conversed while enjoying lunch.

"No matter where I am, whether in combat or here, I always look forward to celebrating St. Patrick's Day with my fellow engineers," stated O'Hora. "It's part of our tradition."

Marines from 8th Engineer Support Battalion, 2nd Marine Logistics Group, participate in the Blarney Stone toss during the St. Patrick's Day Field Meet. During the Blarney Stone toss, Marines competed to see who could throw the stone the furthest.

Haqlaniyah children score big with new soccer field

The red team practices a soccer foot drill prior the official opening of the Haqlaniyah, Iraq, soccer league March 15. Approximately $20,000 was raised to purchase uniforms and soccer equipment. Equipment was also purchased for girls' volleyball. This is one of many Embedded Provincial Reconstruction Teams in the Haditha Triad. Other projects include a new city council building and a library.

HAQLANIYAH, Iraq — The newly-built soccer field in Haqlaniyah, Iraq, was officially opened Jan. 1, but unfortunately, no games were played.

That all changed March 15, when supplies flown in from America were passed out into the arms of the awaiting Iraqi children.

"When we came here in September, the area of Haqlaniyah was pretty devastated and most of the people were tired of the fighting," said Michael A. Wilson, assistant battalion surgeon, 3rd Battalion, 23rd Marine Regiment, Regimental Combat Team 5.

"Haqlaniyah and the surrounding area is still a hot bed for insurgent activities and recruiting, and [we] felt a strong need to show the locals good things would come from working with Coalition forces and the new Iraqi government," he said.

Good things have come for the people of Haqlaniyah.

Embedded Provincial Reconstruction Teams are working with the local Iraqis to teach them new job skills and to fund projects like the new city council building and library.

EPRT also helped supply the money required to build the soccer field. However, there was not sufficient funds to purchase equipment or fund the soccer leagues.

"I decided to contact my wife, family and friends back home and ask them for help," said Wilson. "My wife and a high school friend of mine organized two separate fund-raising drives to raise money to buy the uniforms required to support the Haqlaniyah area soccer league. Together they coordinated the efforts of several groups and over 100 individuals to raise over $20,000."

To celebrate, a newly formed boys soccer league was formed with eight teams.

"We are very happy to have this place now," said Samer Hamid, 9, through an interpreter. A competitive spirit ran rampant through the children while waiting to receive their new uniforms.

"Our team is going to beat everyone," said Hamid of the yellow team. "We are the fastest and the best scorers."

"No, our team is going to win, God willing," said Omar Khaled, 10, defending the green team.

The boys' league was funded; however, money was also raised to purchase volleyball equipment for the girls of the city.

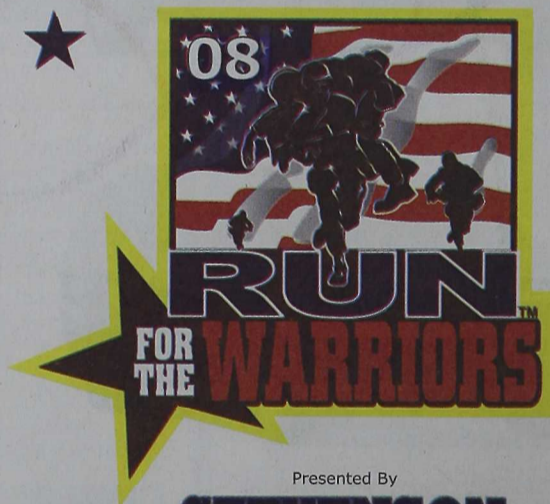

"The key to the whole thing was a chance to help the kids in the Haqlaniyah area," said Wilson. "I firmly believe that random acts of kindness are contagious, and who better to hopefully share [kindness] with than the Iraqi children."

The coach of the blue team passes out jerseys to the waiting children of the Haqlaniyah, Iraq, soccer league March 15. The Embedded Provincial Reconstruction Team and private donors from the U.S. donated time and money to build a new soccer field in Haqlaniyah. The league officially began playing March 15 with the passing out of jerseys and equipment. Money was also raised for the local girls to buy volleyball equipment.

Cubs starter Rich Hill realizing he needs to relax as difficult spring winds down

By Seligman

SA, Ariz. — By his own admission, Rich Hill tends to be a tad analytical. So he wasn't surprised when Chicago Cubs manager Lou Piniella told him to get off the mound. "I'm not the type of person who's going to go in there and say, 'I like the type of car; let's go buy it,'" Hill said. "I'm going to research it, and then I'll do other things, I sit and think a lot. It does run in the family." "I, yes, it does drive him crazy," Piniella said. "It's funny, because you know how much you need to take care of the plate, that you need to take care of the ball. It's almost like you're following yourself to get out of your own way. You're continuing to do it." Hill keeps misfiring. His ERA this spring is 7.11. He has 4 walks and nine strikeouts, allowed 15 hits in 12 2-3 innings, and his most recent outing at the Colorado Rockies on Monday was particularly bad. Hill opened the game with seven hits and never really got the plate. He walked the batter loaded and, after a double, walked two more to load them before getting out of the jam on one run. The second, he walked another and committed an error before Piniella pulled him. In all, Hill walked the 11 batters he faced.

Hill is scheduled to start Tuesday, but he's not auditioning for a spot. A miserable spring won't keep him out of the rotation. Not after he emerged as the Cubs' third-best starter last season.

Either Jon Lieber or Jason Marquis figures to be the odd man out when Piniella announces the fifth starter on Monday, even though both have ERAs under 2.00.

"I want him to relax," Piniella said. "Rich puts undue pressure on himself. He's a very conscientious kid and he wants to be a perfectionist, and there's no such thing in this business. I told him, 'Don't concern yourself with thinking that there's even a possibility of us taking you out of the rotation. We like you. Go out there and relax and throw the ball.'"

Hill's quick to acknowledge he has a tough time doing that, because his mind tends to kick into overdrive.

"That's something that I've been given is an analytical mind," he said. "I put too much stock into things, overanalyze things. The best thing is to keep things simple. It just makes everything go a lot smoother."

A year ago, Hill didn't walk a batter during the spring and had a 1.73 ERA over his first six starts once the season started. He went 11-8 with a 3.92 ERA and helped the Cubs win the NL Central. Now, he can't find the plate.

Piniella joked Hill spent so much time throwing in the bullpen after the Colorado game Thursday that "I think he would have thrown until 9 o'clock last night. He wouldn't have stopped."

And Hill added, "I would have been there to turn the lights on in the morning" had the coaches not made him stop.

But before he got dragged away, he and pitching coach Larry Rothschild adjusted his delivery, leveling out his shoulders. That should boost his control and quicken his delivery, making it harder to run on him.

Hill said the adjustments "cleaned up a lot of things" and simplified his delivery. He said he's been giving himself "a lot of positive reinforcement from last year" by reviewing video of his better moments.

"It's being able to rebuild again and go out and have some success and build off that success, whether it's minor success or seven shutout innings," Hill said. "I'll be honest, this is not fun to go out there and not pitch well. That's not the point. We've been working rather diligently on getting back on track. It's time to just go out there and do it."

Piniella simply wants Hill to clear his mind.

"He thinks too much and he worries," Piniella said. "He's very conscientious, but he's got to learn to relax. I said to him, 'You won 11 ballgames last year, and you've got one more year under your belt.' He's got a good chance to run this thing up to 15, 16."

WR D.J. Hackett agrees to 2-year, $3.5 million deal with Panthers

By Mike Cranston

CHARLOTTE, N.C. — Help is on the way for Steve Smith.

Determined to end the constant double teams of their star receiver, the Carolina Panthers came to terms Monday with Seattle free-agent D.J. Hackett on a two-year, $3.5 million deal.

Hackett is the second receiver the Panthers have added since missing the playoffs last season without a reliable second option after Smith. Muhsin Muhammad was signed last month.

Keary Colbert and Drew Carter, who shared the starting spot opposite Smith last season, were not re-signed after combining for a meager 70 catches.

"We feel like we should have a very competitive atmosphere at that position," general manager Marty Hurney said. "We feel like we have improved the talent level."

The Seahawks had hoped to re-sign Hackett but have limited salary-cap space and a deep pool of receivers that includes Deion Branch, Bobby Engram and Nate Burleson.

Hackett was assured he'd be the No. 2 receiver in Carolina, said his agent, Kevin Robinson.

"The opportunity that they presented to him, he felt like it was a really good opportunity," Robinson said.

Hackett spent last week visiting Washington, Tampa Bay and Carolina, where he met with Hurney, coach John Fox and talked on the phone with Smith.

"He has the ability to make plays and has been productive," Hurney said. "We think he is a very good fit for us."

The 26-year-old Hackett has been plagued by injuries in his four-year career with the Seahawks. He was limited to six games last season because of a lingering right ankle sprain, finishing with 32 catches for 384 yards and three touchdowns.

Hackett had six catches for 101 yards and a touchdown in Seattle's win over Washington in the NFC wild-card game. But he aggravated the ankle injury and wasn't at full strength a week later when he was held to two catches in Seattle's loss to Green Bay in the divisional playoffs.

Hackett was also placed on injured reserve as a rookie in 2004 with a hip injury.

At 6-foot-2 and 208 pounds, Hackett provides a big target to complement the small and speedy Smith.

Hackett and Muhammad give the Panthers options they didn't have last season.

The Panthers had hoped rookie Dwayne Jarrett would be their No. 2 receiver in 2007, releasing veteran Keyshawn Johnson three days after drafting Jarrett in the second round.

But Jarrett struggled to learn the playbook and never cracked the starting lineup.

The Panthers hope that Jarrett develops this season, but he was arrested last week and charged with driving while impaired. If convicted, Jarrett could face disciplinary action under the league's personal conduct policy.

Hurney said the two events — Jarrett's arrest and the signing of Hackett — were not related.

"Not at all," Hurney said. "We've been talking to his people for the last few weeks."

"They never stopped hustling," said interim head coach William Brooks of Team 2. "We knew from playing [H-RID] twice before that we could get the shots we wanted as long as we took the time to make the extra pass."

For Faircloth, the game plan was even simpler than that. "We played together, and when you can get five guys on the court who can do that you've got a team, not a bunch of individuals."

II MEF encourages Marines to vote

Lance Cpl. Brian Lewis
II Marine Expeditionary Force

One of the most important aspects of being a United States citizen is the right to vote. It allows a single person to impact the future of the nation.

With the primaries and general elections coming up in the next few months,

II Marine Expeditionary Force is preparing Marines to cast their vote and make a difference.

"Marines are leaders and are the ones who make change," said Maj. John J. Depinto, the voting assistance officer for II Marine Expeditionary Force Headquarters Group, II MEF. "They need to vote and affect the process of selecting Congress and the President."

The command of II MEF encourages Marines and sailors to take advantage of available resources and vote in the upcoming election.

"We have posters advertising dates of primaries and elections, and we will be holding classes in the upcoming months to teach Marines and sailors about how to vote," Depinto said. "We also have voting assistance officers."

The voting assistance officers are Marines trained to inform others about the importance of voting and how to get registered.

"It isn't hard to become registered to vote," said Lance Cpl. James Schneider, a motor transport operator with II MHG. "You fill out a registration form and you are registered for four years."

Marines can easily register to vote, even if they're deployed half-way across the world.

Civil War casualties teach 2nd Medical Battalion valuable lessons

A Civil War re-enactor holds his intestinal moulage together while a young Civil War drummer boy looks on. The re-enactors took part in the 143rd anniversary commemoration of the Battle of Bentonville held at the original site in Four Oaks, N.C.

FOUR OAKS, N.C. — Imagine feeling your lower leg being manually sawed off below the knee without the aid of anesthesia to numb the sickening pain. If you can handle it, you survive through the shock. If you can't, you immediately die of extreme shock or worse, a slow, infectious death. Unfortunately, many of the 80,000 soldiers who fought in the bloody Battle of Bentonville experienced this scenario simply because doctors did not have the personnel, supplies and technology to properly treat all wounded. Luckily for the Marines and sailors who fight today, corpsmen and Navy doctors do.

The medical personnel of 2nd Marine Logistics Group, 2nd Medical Battalion know how to save more lives on the battlefield in part because of lessons learned in battles such as Bentonville in 1865. During that time, military medicine and technology was harsh for injured and mortally wounded soldiers.

On the 143rd anniversary of the historic battle, Marines and sailors of 2nd Med. Bn. revealed just how far military medicine has come when they participated in the commemoration of the Battle of Bentonville. The battalion took part in the annual two-day event to show an estimated 3,000 Civil War enthusiasts the progression of life-saving techniques on the battlefield and to train incoming medical personnel how to deal with battlefield casualties.

"The purpose of our [medical personnel] existence is to save lives," Navy Lt. Sonny McGowan the Bravo Surgical Company Commander said. "With the medical technology and 'know-how' that we have today, we save

Amputee tells his story of loss, recovery

He faded in and out of consciousness. He knew his legs were injured, but he did not know to what extent.

Capt. Ray Baronie, the executive officer for the Wounded Warrior Battalion-East, Wounded Warrior Regiment, Manpower and Reserve Affairs, has few clear memories of his hospital stays overseas. One of the things he remembers is watching the doctors cut off his boots, as they talked about amputation.

Baronie, at the time a liaison officer between the Iraqi Security Forces and the Marines of II Marine Expeditionary Force (Forward), was on a U.S. Army convoy moving an Iraqi battalion from one side of Ramadi, Iraq, to the other, when his vehicle was struck by a 57 mm anti-tank rocket, Dec. 1, 2005.

"I got knocked out and when I came to, the vehicle had rolled for two blocks," he said.

"There were just two Marines on the convoy, Sgt. Delwin Davis and myself. Sgt. Davis pulled me out of the vehicle."

Baronie was free from the vehicle, but far from safe.

"Very shortly after we got on the street, we started taking small arms fire," he said. "It was a weird feeling. I didn't know if I was going to make it. For the first time as a Marine, I felt helpless. It was pretty hectic. I had no control over the situation at that point, but I knew I was in good hands with Sgt. Davis."

Baronie said he knew his legs were injured, but did not know the full extent of his injuries until he woke up in the Naval Hospital in Bethesda, Md.

"My legs were crushed," Baronie said. "I had 20 fractures in my left leg and 18 fractures in my right. I had close to 40 surgeries."

Baronie found the strength to overcome his injury through the support of his family and the Marine Corps.

"My father and my fiancée were with me," he said. "The Marine Corps did an excellent job of

Most people have good intentions when they are forced to leave their pets at the local pound. Whether they are doing it because of a new baby coming into the family, a cycle of deployments or high medical bills, the majority are under the impression that their pet will be claimed and introduced to a new loving home — that rarely happens.

What pet-owners don't realize is that, on average, their beloved pet will have roughly a week to a month to live. Once their kill day arrives, the animals will be sent into a small room that will fill up with carbon monoxide, slowly killing all that occupy it.

Lexi, a purebred rottweiler, was set for this dim fate. Fortunately for her, she was saved on her kill day by Gunnery Sgt. Annie E. Scott and the North Carolina Rottweiler Rescue.

According to Danielle Canavan, a key-volunteer with the rescue, the NCRR is a non-profit organization built entirely of volunteers who have rescued rottweilers, among other dogs, since 1988. Through the hard work of volunteers like Scott, many homeless and abused dogs have been taken from pounds and placed in loving homes.

"The volunteer foster parents have an important role," Canavan said. "The public doesn't realize how many dogs are out there that need homes. There are other breeds, not just [rottweilers] that are put to sleep. Without [the volunteers], these dogs would have no hope."

Scott, the staff secretary of the 2nd Marine Logistics Group, joined the rescue shortly after arriving at 2nd MLG in May 2007. After reviewing the organization's Web page and conducting Dogs wait behind a fence for someone to adopt them. Sadly, most of the time they end up being put to sleep. some research, she determined she wanted to help, despite the rottweiler's negative reputation as a bully breed. Subsequently, she met Lexi.

"I got her in May of last year," Scott said, remembering when she took Lexi home for the first time. "I've never had any problems with her. She has shown no aggression toward me or any of the children I've brought near her. I've simply loved every minute of it."

According to Canavan, a serious factor that comes into play is the dogs' reputation. A dog's behavior often exhibits past training, or lack thereof. The actions of the dog can be either dangerous or benign, all depending on past socializing experience.

"Everyone who is going to open their home to a [rottweiler] should read literature on the breed because they are a different type of dog," Canavan explained. "They are a working class dog. They need to feel important. They need forms of energy release and proper training so they are obedient."

Canavan, who has participated in the organization for more than a year, has opened her home to several dogs. One of her biggest accomplishments was convincing her husband, Rick Canavan, to bring a rottweiler into their home with two young children, a thought that would scare many parents.

"I took it upon myself to do the research on the animal by looking on the internet and reading various books to learn what their disposition was and how they are with kids to eliminate any stereotypes I had," said Rick, now proud owner of a rottweiler named Abby. "I'm extremely satisfied with my decision. Abby is a great dog."

Through his time with Abby,

Danielle Canavan and rottweiler Lexi attend an adoption drive in Sonville, N.C. Canavan, a volunteer with the North Carolina Rottweiler Rescue, assisted Lexi's foster mom, Gunnery Sgt. Annie E. Scott, event. The rescue is a non-profit organization built entirely of volunteers that have rescued rottweilers, among other dogs, since 1988. Scott is the staff secretary of 2nd Marine Logistics Group.

Rick has come to agree with the rescue on the idea that with the proper training and socialization, the rottweiler can become one of the best family dogs one can find.

"I've come to the conclusion that your dog will be whatever you put into them," Rick said.

Scott now prepares to deploy overseas soon, nearly one year after bringing Lexi into her home. As the final months arrive, Scott continues to do her best to find a permanent home for her dog, and even if she is unsuccessful, the rescue will do their part.

"Annie has been a tremendous help by fostering Lexi and providing a stable home environment for her to thrive in and become easily [adapted] to a family. Elaine Rothbauer, the NCRR's resident and foster manager, said the [rescue] could not exist without valuable volunteers such as Scott. Her dedication to her country and to an animal welfare organization like ours is [inspiring]."

Rothbauer said the organization supports Scott 100 percent. She further explained the organization will be here for her when she is gone and will ensure Lexi is placed in a loving foster home if she is not permanently adopted prior to Scott's deployment.

taking care of me. They took care of my girlfriend even though we weren't married. The Marine Corps knew I needed her support and that was very important."

The support he received helped him make the otherwise hard decision to have his right leg amputated above the knee during January 2006, after a year of trying to save it.

The amputation did not stop him from wanting to continue his career, but he was unsure what path he would take until he received a fateful phone call.

"I was in Bethesda when Lt. Col. Thomas Siebenthal gave me a phone call," he said. "He needed a battalion executive officer, and I thought, 'I need to take this position.'"

Being the executive officer of a battalion is hard enough, let alone with a brand new battalion still trying to find its place, said Master Sgt. Kenneth Barnes, the operations chief for the battalion.

"He came here and had to drink from the fire hose just like everyone else," Barnes said. "He was wounded, so he knew about half of it. That makes it a little bit easier for him."

His injuries also allow him to empathize with the Marines in the battalion, giving him insight someone without injuries might not have.

"He's great at his job," Barnes said. "His heart is really in it. A Marine can come in with his sob story and all he has to do is stand up and show them they can get through it. It also makes it harder for someone to pull the wool over his eyes."

The job goes both ways for Baronie. Being able to help Marines with their injuries is also therapeutic.

"Everyone has their own way of dealing with their injuries," he explained. "Sometimes they need a little guidance in the right direction, tough love or to talk one-on-one. My injury gives me credibility with the Marines. It's given me the ability to deal with their individual needs. Working with the Marines and being back to work has greatly helped me. Being in this position has made me forget the fact I am hurt."

are deployed, the first thing a Marine needs is his address," Depinto said. "He can be sent a federal postcard application, fill it out and then send it back."

Depinto feels with all the resources available, Marines have no excuse to avoid voting.

"By not voting, Marines are burying their heads in the sand," Depinto said. "They are just hoping someone else will take care of them."

CIVIL WAR, from IC

many more lives than what was accomplished during the Civil War and particularly the Battle of Bentonville."

During that deadly conflict between Gen. William T. Sherman's Union troops and Gen. Joseph E. Johnston's Confederate troops, nearly 5,000 soldiers became casualties. The majority of those soldiers were victims of amputated limbs, a common operation throughout the 19th century in the absence of prosthetic alternatives. Petty Officer 1st Class Michael Whaley, a native of Knoxville, Tenn., saw firsthand the difference adequate equipment and advanced medical technology can make when trying to save lives in a combat environment; he served with Marines during Operation Iraqi Freedom as a surgical technologist and helped save numerous lives alongside some of the Navy's finest surgeons.

"If they had the equipment and capability that we possess today during the Battle of Bentonville set up outside of the Harper House, there would have been a sharp decline in the number of lives and limbs lost," Whaley explained.

Soldiers who endured the brutal medical treatment during amputation were said to have done so because of their strong religious faith. Charlie Mallory, a Civil War re-enactor and Civil War history aficionado, says his two great-grandfathers and great-great-uncles whom served with the 46th Virginia Army during the Civil War attributed their survival to their spirituality and faith in God. "People's faith back then allowed them to endure loss and pain better than the way we today are able to," Mallory stated. "That is what has been passed down from generation to generation in my family and why I feel it's so important to keep the history alive."

Commemoration of the anniversary every year will ensure the history of such a bloody battle will probably never be forgotten. Instead it provides a glimpse into the past of lives lost for such a controversial cause and lessons learned for today's military medical field.

"This event gives people a chance to see where we have come with regards to anesthesia, pain control and life-saving techniques," McGowan notes. "It's a walk in time to see where medical technology has come from and hopefully a continued appreciation for where we are today."

NMCRS has high hopes for 2008

Lance Cpl. Ryan Turnage
Marine Corps Base

For the last 104 years, Marines and sailors have relied on the Navy-Marine Corps Relief Society whenever they have suffered an unexpected financial emergency.

Whether it is serious illness, injury, or an automobile in need of repair, the society is there to provide solutions to the temporary financial problems of military families.

"The society doesn't provide anything which could help a Marine or sailor save their lives," but our financial management education can certainly assist them in their financial lives; to live within their means, get ready for deployment, budget to buy a new car, or prepare for a new marriage or a new baby," said Virginia Schopfel, a director with NMCRS.

During the past year, more than 45,500 Marines, sailors and their families received $43.6 million in interest-free loans and outright grants — about 15 percent more from last year.

The society hired eight additional full-time visiting nurses to assist service members and their families deal with combat casualty issues, as well as making face-to-face contact with injured Marines, sailors and their family members.

Following a successful test at eight society offices in 2007, to include Naval Submarine Base New London, the society expanded its popular Quick Assist Loan program Jan. 23 to active-duty Marines and sailors serving our nation around the world.

At the eight test sites in the final months of 2007, society volunteers and employees disbursed more than $8.8 million in quick assist loans to 3,833 active-duty chiefs. In the first two weeks since the society expanded the program globally, 1,556 have received more than $450,000 in QAL financial assistance.

In 2007, donations totaled $10.4 million. Navy and Marine Corps retirees contributed an additional $2.4 million. For the 2008 fund drive and many more to come, the 3,400 volunteers and small professional staff of the society will always be there to help Marines, sailors and their families in need.

"Walk-ins are seen on a first-come, first-served basis at 8 a.m. Money through Friday," said Schopfel. The office is located at 400 McHugh Blvd. across from the Protestant Chapel.

It's never too late to donate, although the deadline for the 2008 fund drive is April 11. For more information visit online at www.nmcrs.org or call the society at 451-5336.

All nominees, finalists and the Spouse of the Year will be recognized by the business and military community at an awards luncheon hosted by Landmark Military Media of North Carolina, proud civilian publishers of The Globe and RotoVue, at the Camp Lejeune Officer's Club on Thursday May 15th.

NOMINATE YOUR HERO TODAY!

Some say the hardest job in the military belongs to the military spouse. Active duty spouses are the unsung heroes who maintain the home-front during lengthy deployments, selflessly give back to their communities and provide moral support for friends, family and their loved ones serving in harms way, at home and abroad. While service members are rewarded for superior job performance with medals, promotions and ceremonies, military spouses generally only receive a kiss and a "thank you" from their significant others.

Spring debuts in Wilmington

The 2008 North Carolina Azalea Festival, set to take place April 9 through 13, in Wilmington, N.C., boasts "something for everyone." There is a parade, and there are parties and tours of beautiful gardens and historic homes. A coin show, street fair and a circus are also among the festival's activities. Those in the younger set may even recognize some of the celebrities behind their favorite characters on the CW hit show "One Tree Hill" at an event taking place during the festival. The Citadel's Summerall Guards, composed of 61 cadets from the First Class, perform without voice commands at the Queen's Garden Party and in the parade. Each year, wealthy young women in white dresses make their introduction to society through the debutant ball. And each spring, trees with pink, lavender and white blossoms herald the coming of a new season of promise.

"It's kind of like the coming-out party around here for Spring," says Charlie Rivenbark, past president of Wilmington, N.C.'s Azalea Festival, of the event, which is now in its 61st year. "We have a big time and we pray for good weather. If we don't get it, we still have a big time."

Native to the South Eastern United States, azaleas are called "the royalty of the garden," according to the Azalea Society of America.

A long-time resident of Wilmington, Dr. W. Houston Moore, an active member of the Rotary Club, felt that the azaleas in the town should be celebrated. The idea could not be implemented until after the end of World War II, but in 1947 Moore invited a member from each of the leading civic clubs in the town to the Chamber of Commerce to discuss the dream of holding an azalea festival.

This first festival was a raging success. It took place during the peak blooming of the azaleas and netted a profit. Though Moore died the summer after the first Azalea Festival, he was able to see his dream become a reality.

Since then, the Wilmington Azalea Festival has grown to a yearly event, which nets between 250,000 to 300,000 visitors per year, according to Rivenbark. This year's event is set to take place April 9 through 13 in the port city. It will include parties, a parade, a street fair, concerts, special events and, according to the festival's Web page, "all that is Southern."

"It's one of the top 20 festivals in the South East and one of the top 100 in the entire county. And that's not just us saying that. This is from various organizations and publications," says Rivenbark.

In fact, this year's Azalea Garden Tour was featured in the March 2007 issue of that paragon of all things southern, Southern Living magazine. This year's garden tour, the 55th observation of this event, features tours of 11 public and private gardens with the theme of "Gardens from the River to the Sea." For more information regarding the Annual Azalea Garden Tour, hosted by the Cape Fear Garden Club, visit the event's Web site at www.azaleagradentour.org.

Additionally, the 2008 Azalea Home Tour, organized by the Historic Wilmington Foundation, will highlight 10 private homes of historical and architectural interest. Information about this tour may be found on the Historic Wilmington Foundation's home

Rivenbark, a Vietnam veteran, says military families from the Jacksonville area are expressly invited to participate in the Azalea Festival. "We like to think we are very friendly and appreciative of our military," he says, adding, "Their families are very special to us and we would hope that they would like to come down and see what is going on."

No doubt, folks who travel from Jacksonville will find many events and locations to explore at the 2008 North Carolina Azalea Festival. There will even be a half pipe set up downtown for skateboarders to enjoy. Yet the perennial question remains, "Will the azaleas actually be blooming during the festival?"

Rivenbark says that festival organizers always try to plan the event to coincide with the peak beauty of the azaleas; however, he admits that Mother Nature has her own timing and that does not always happen.

"We've been having some chilly nights, which have been holding [the azaleas] back a little so, to tell you the truth, we may hit it right on the head this year," he says.

For more information about the Azalea Festival including a complete schedule of events, visit the festival Web site at www.ncazaleafestival.org. For more information about Wilmington, visit the Cape Fear Coast Convention and Visitor's Bureau Web site at www.cape-fear.nc.us.

'The Eye:' A twisted, mind-bending story

With Reinhold

Playing at the Jacksonville Theater

"THE EYE" (PG-13)
"The Eye" is a suspense horror thriller about a blind woman who has supernatural visions after regaining her sight from a corneal implant.

Jessica Alba ("Good Luck Chuck," "Sin City," "Into the Blue") stars as Sydney Wells, an accomplished concert violinist who has been blind since a childhood tragedy robbed her of her sight.

Now, Sydney undergoes a double corneal transplant and her sight is restored. However, Sydney's happiness is short-lived, as shadowy and frightening images start to haunt her.

Are these images the result of the surgery and will they eventually disappear, or are they a product of her imagination, or something more frightening?

As Sydney's family and friends begin to doubt her sanity, Sydney is soon convinced her anonymous eye donor has somehow opened the door to a terrifying world only she can see.

The terrorized Sydney feels compelled to find out whose eyes she has inherited and what secrets they may have seen.

Alessandro Nivola ("The Clearing," "Junebug," "Face/Off") costars as Dr. Paul Faulkner, a neuro-psychologist who is helping her with the ghoulish images that flash before her eyes.

Also appearing are Parker Posey ("For Your Consideration") as Helen Wells; and Chloe Grace Moretz ("Big Momma's House") as Alicia Millstone.

Directors David Moreau and Xavier Palud ("Them") teamed up for this chilling remake of the 2002 Hong Kong thriller "The Eye."

Alba learned to play the violin, read Braille and walk with a cane for her role as a blind woman, who, after having complicated and miraculous eye surgery, can see into the supernatural world.

"The Eye" is one of those twisted and mind-bender stories the Asian horror flicks are known for. Too bad our filmmakers cannot come up with a more original spin on some of their material.

"UNTRACEABLE" (R)

"Untraceable" is an intense thriller about a serial killer who posts videos of his victims on the Internet.

Diane Lane ("Unfaithful," "Under the Tuscan Sun," "The Perfect Storm") stars as Jennifer Marsh, an agent with the FBI's Cyber Crime Division, a special division dedicated to investigating and

'The Eye' stars Jessica Alba as Sydney Wells, a concert violinist who has been blind since childhood. movies.com prosecuting criminals on the Internet.

Marsh is tasked with hunting down a seemingly untraceable serial killer. Working as special agent on the frontlines of the war on cyber crime, she thought she has seen it all.

Now, a technical-savvy Internet predator, Owen Reilly, played by Joseph Cross ("Flags of Our Fathers"), is displaying his graphic murders on his own Web site and leaves the fate of each of his tormented captives in the hands of the public. The more hits his site gets, the faster his victims die.

The serial killer knows that people, out of curiosity are drawn to dark issues, and will eventually log on to his site, where he conducts violent and painful murders live on the net.

As time runs out, the cat and mouse chase becomes more personal. Marsh and her team must race against the clock to track down this technical mastermind.

Colin Hanks ("King Kong," "Alone with Her") plays Griffin Dowd, Marsh's assistant in tracking down the killer.

Billy Burke ("Fracture," "Ladder 49") costars as police detective Eric Box who teams up with Marsh and Dowd to crack the case.

Mary Beth Hurt ("Lady in the Water") appears as Stella Marsh.

Directors Gregory Hoblit ("Fracture," "Hart's War," "Primal Fear," "Frequency") and David Rosenbloom ("Hart's War") teamed up for this rather slick criminal nightmare.

"Untraceable" is a very grisly, thrill-seeking, but also thought-provoking thriller, that is also very troubling to watch. The graphic violence, subject matter and showing the public's fascination with all that is violent does not make for an enjoyable experience.

Playing at the Midway Park Theater

THERE WILL BE BLOOD" (R)

"There Will Be Blood" is a sprawling epic of family, faith, power and oil.

Set in California at the turn-of-the-century petroleum boom, the drama chronicles a prospector who gets the valuable oil drilling rights to a family's ranch and finds his American dream has become something of a nightmare.

The film also tackles the highly-difficult relationship with his son.

Daniel Day-Lewis ("Gangs of New York," "The Last of the Mohicans," "In the Name of the Father," "My Left Foot") stars as Daniel Plainview, who transforms himself from being a down-and-out small-time silver miner to a self-made oil tycoon.

After Daniel gets a tip about the abundance of oil out West, he heads with his son, H.W., played by Dillion Freasier, to take their chances in a small dust-worn town.

Paul Dano ("Little Miss Sunshine," "Fast Food Nation") costars as Eli Sunday, a charismatic preacher of a holy-roller church who is also a self-proclaimed faith healer.

Eli makes a deal with the family of the Sunday Ranch which involves Daniel building a church for Eli. It allows Daniel to buy the oil rights to their family ranch. Soon after drilling, he hits a major pocket of crude oil and Daniel starts buying up most of the land surrounding the Sunday Ranch.

While struggling with raising his son and the constant sparring with Eli, his adversary, success comes at a high price.

As Daniel's luck turns around and money is no longer an issue, human conflicts and corruption quickly enter the picture.

Writer and director Paul Thomas Anderson ("Punch Drunk Love," "Magnolia," "Boogie Nights") prepared this loose ad-adaptation of the 1927 novel Oil! by Sinclair and made a masterpiece.

Daniel Day-Lewis, under the leadership of the talented Anderson, achieved one of his most powerful and over-remembered performances.

He gives us a highly intense portrait of an overly-ambitious, brooding, egomaniacal man; his need for deadly confrontations and his conflicts as a human and father.

"There Will Be Blood," with its excellent score by Radiohead's Jonny Greenwood and stunningly stark cinematography, is a brilliant and masterful film about the grueling, greedy business of prospecting for 'black gold,' oil. It is also a very powerful and unforgettable portrait of a complicated character, Plainview.

"There Will Be Blood" is definitely a feel-good movie, but one which will stay with you for a long time to come.

This movie deserves all the accolades already bestowed upon it and is sure to win many more.

"DR. SEUSS' HORTON HEARS A WHO" (G)

"Dr. Seuss' Horton Hears a Who" is a lovely, animated family film.

The movie tells the tale about an imaginative elephant Horton who hears a faint cry for help coming from a speck of dust floating through the sky.

Although Horton doesn't have a speck that speck houses an entire city named Who-ville, inhabited by the microscopic Whos.

Horton, however, suspects there may be life on that speck and is determined to lend a hand to help and protect the small community.

Despite being ridiculed and teased by his neighbors, he sets out to save the tiny particle.

His neighbors think he has lost his mind and refuse to believe the tiny speck exists.

The talented and funny Jim Carrey lends his voice to the starring role of Horton, the big-hearted elephant who lives by the motto that a person's size is no matter how small.

Steve Carell voices the Mayor of Who-ville.

You can also hear Carol Burnett as the busybody kangaroo; Will Arnett as Morton; Seth Rogen as Vlad; Isla Fisher as Dr. Mary Lou Larue; Jaime Lerner as Mrs. Quilligan and Dan Vogel as Councilman Yummo Wickersham.

Jimmy Hayward and Steve Markham, two old pros in Hollywood are making their directing debut with this delightful animated movie.

The story is based on the 1954 book Horton Hears a Who by Dr. Seuss, the beloved author of children books.

The computer-generated animation is beautifully done and stays close to the artful and distinctive illustrations of Dr. Seuss' work.

Carrey is hilarious and the film is a rare treat.

"Dr. Seuss' Horton Hears a Who" is a very sweet and funny film and a wonderful experience for all of us who are still young at heart. Take the little ones for a fantastic Easter treat.

just because he was older. He was "different."

He had Down's syndrome and its obvious manifestations: Facial characteristics, slow responses and symptoms of retardation.

One Sunday after Easter the Sunday school teacher gathered some of those plastic eggs which pull apart in the middle. She gave one of these plastic eggs to each child.

On that beautiful spring day, each child was to go outdoors and discover for himself some symbol of "new life" and place that symbolic seed or leaf or whatever inside his egg.

They would then open their eggs one by one, and each youngster would explain how his find was a symbol of "new life."

So ... The youngsters gathered around on the appointed day and put their eggs on a table, and the teacher began to open them.

One child had a flower.

All the children "oohed" and "aahed" at the lovely symbol of new life. In another was a butterfly. "Beautiful," the girls said. And it's not easy for an 8-year-old to say "beautiful."

Another egg was opened to reveal a rock. Some of the children laughed. "That's crazy!" one said. "How's a rock supposed to be like a 'new life'?" Immediately a little boy spoke up and said, "That's mine. I knew everybody would get flowers and leaves and butterflies and all that stuff, so I got a rock to be different."

Everybody laughed.

On and on it went until all the eggs were opened. The teacher opened the last egg and there was nothing inside.

"That's not fair," someone said. "That's stupid," said another.

The teacher felt a tug on his shirt. It was Philip. Looking up he said, "I did it. I did it. It's empty. I have no life because the tomb is empty."

The class fell silent. From that day on Philip became part of the group. They welcomed him. Whatever made him different was never mentioned again.

Phillip's family had known he would not live a long life; just too many things wrong with his tiny body. That summer he overcame with infection, Phillip died.

On the day of his funeral, nine 8-year-old boys and girls confronted the reality of death and marched up the altar — not with flowers.

Nine children with their Sunday school teacher placed on the casket of their friend their gift of love — an empty egg.

Love for American service members inspires grandmother to write a song for them

Morna W. Owens
Special to The Globe

One morning, as I was fixing breakfast, I found myself whistling a tune. I asked myself, "What song is that?" I couldn't place it. Finally I realized I had never heard it before.

The melody expanded. Then, the phrase came to me, "I'll be coming home." I knew then I had been given a song for a service member.

I sat down at the piano and picked out the melody. I had never written a song before. When I sat down and wrote out all the lyrics, they came to me so easily.

I believe in our troops. They are far away and I hope they would appreciate this song and references to keeping home just like it was when they left so that when they return it will just be the same.

I've been concerned of late that those of us who have no one fighting in the war seem to be disconnected from the troops and their families. My generation endured another unpopular war in Vietnam and when our troops came home they were very demoralized.

Is not the same divisiveness happening now in the current war? And what can I do to raise the consciousness of my generation so they will do something to protect the self-interest and good hearts of our men and women overseas now?

I have a melody and lyrics but need help to put them together. I envision this song being written by a country singer with a deep, throaty voice. I want Americans everywhere to hear it and cry for the lonely service member who, in a song, asks us to keep home just the way it is until he or she can come back.

Owens, of no relation to The Globe staffer by the same name, is an artist, homemaker and a songwriter. She is 58 years old and lives in Portsmouth, Va. Owens sent this article to The Globe because she said she has a heart for service members. If you want to get in touch with Owens about finishing her song, call The Globe at 451-7419 or e-mail heather.owens@militarynews.com.

I'll Be Coming Home

Keep the lights on Main Street
Shining through the night;
In my darkest moments,
I see them burning bright.

Send the little children
Out to laugh and play;
I see them in the sunlight
Though I'm far away.

When the leaves are turning,
Have a stroll along the lane;
Know if I were with you,
I would do the same.

Say hello to all the neighbors
You see along the way;
I remember all their faces
Like it was yesterday.

Keep the porch light burning
For I am coming home;
Maybe not tomorrow,
But maybe someday soon.

Keep the letters coming
Wherever I may roam;
They help me to remember
What it's like at home.

Keep the porch light burning
For I am coming home;
Maybe not tomorrow,
But maybe someday soon.

Military mentors sought to assist children of the fallen attending Good Grief Camp

Press Release
Tragedy Assistance Program for Survivors

Mentors can play a critical role in helping children grieving the loss of a loved one in the Armed Forces, the Tragedy Assistance Program for Survivors, is recruiting more than 300 mentors to help at its 14th annual Good Grief Camp being held Memorial Day Weekend near Washington, D.C.

"We've found that children who have attended the Good Grief Camp felt a closeness to each other like many have never experienced, as they are surrounded by others their age who have experienced a similar loss," said Heather Campagna, the director of the Good Grief Camp for 2008. "There is a comfort when someone says they understand ... and for the first time in many instances, they know it is true."

Campagna says that finding mentors with a military background is critical to the camp's success — and she needs more than 300 mentors on-site for the three days. The mentors are desperately needed so each child will have a special friend to talk to and lean on and understand that they are not alone and that the military still cares for them. Training is provided and required prior to mentoring at the camp.

"When a child loses a parent or another relative in the military, often they suffer secondary losses that are not acknowledged in their lives," said Campagna. "They might move away from a home, be away from a military base when that is the only thing they have known, have to attend a new school, notice the achingly empty chair at Thanksgiving dinner and miss their confidante. Connecting with a mentor can be an empowering experience for a child who has already lost so much."

Mentors from past camps say the experience is very rewarding. "I loved working with the kids. The first time I was exhausted at the end of each day, but I never felt more proud to be in uniform than when a child who has lost a loved one looks up at me," said Cpl. Phillip Vilkas.

Training is provided for mentors and is mandatory. Veterans, those on active-duty and military family spouses are encouraged to consider being a mentor.

More than 500 surviving family members and 300 children are expected to attend the TAPS National Seminar and Good Grief Camp. Many of the event's attendees have suffered recent losses of family members in Iraq and Afghanistan.

To apply to be a mentor, go to the TAPS Web site at www.taps.org. Click on the banner for the 2008 National Seminar and Good Grief Camp or go to the events tab to select it.

Families who have lost a loved one serving in the Armed Forces may sign up through www.taps.org to attend the National Seminar and Good Grief Camp. Workshops and seminars are held concurrently with the Good Grief Camp and are designed to help bereaved families cope with their losses and develop new support networks.

TAPS is the national veteran's service organization providing compassionate care for the families of America's fallen military heroes. TAPS provides peer-based emotional support, grief and trauma resources, seminars, case work assistance and 24/7 crisis intervention care for all who have been affected by a death in the Armed Forces. Services are provided free of charge. For more information, visit the Web site at www.taps.org or call the toll-free crisis line at 800-959-TAPS.

Marine South 2008 military exposition comes to Lejeune

Heather Owens
Carolina Living editor

War fighters, listen up! It's time to prepare for the 16th annual Marine South Military Exposition, scheduled to be held aboard Marine Corps Base Camp Lejeune at Goettge Memorial Field House April 2 and 3.

This expo is like a candy store for Marines who want to learn more about the equipment used in performing their day-to-day mission or who feel compelled to add their input to the future of Marine Corps.

Marine South is sponsored by the Marine Corps Leagues and is co-sponsored by Marine Corps Base and Marine Corps Systems Command. According to the press release provided by event coordinator, the Nielsen Company, the expo is among the largest displays of equipment, weapons and systems employed for expeditionary force operations.

Who will be there?

"It's like I joke with people, it's the 'generals': General Dynamics, General Electric, General Motors," says retired Col. Jim Bracken, the show director and 24-year employee of the Nielsen Company.

More than 200 defense contractors, manufacturers and suppliers of military equipment, will be on hand. Marines, members of other military branches, civilian government employees and retired military and defense industry personnel are all invited.

More than 3,000 Marines and civilians are expected to see air and ground equipment and systems currently in service, as well as equipment now being developed for tomorrow's Marine Corps, according to the press release.

Companies send their representatives to Marine South to talk with the actual users of their products in order to gain feedback about the equipment's field performance and to pass on information about its use.

"There's a lot of feedback between the builder of the equipment and the Marines who are or will use the equipment," says Bracken.

Bracken calls the exposition "an eye-opener" and says that Marines and family members, will learn more about what is going on around the Corps as well as the future of the Marine Corps.

The event kicks off with an invita-

Capt. Christopher R. Brouwer of Spicer, Minn., the former executive officer for Company A, 8th Communications Battalion, II Marine Expeditionary Unit, talks with Glock, Inc., Federal Sales Manager J. C. Johnson at their exhibit during the Marine South Military Exposition held at Goettge Memorial Field House April 6, 2006. tion only "Commander's Preview" for senior officer and enlisted Marines and is followed by an official grand opening ceremony. The exhibit hall is scheduled to be open from 10 a.m. through 3 p.m., April 2 and 9 a.m. through 3 p.m. April 3. Marine family members may attend the exposition from noon until 3 p.m. April 3.

Marine South is one of three Marine expositions including Marine West, which is held each January aboard Marine Corps Base Camp Pendleton, Calif. and Modern Day Marine exposition, which takes place at the end of September aboard Marine Corps Base Quantico, Va. Marine West and Marine South are both considered "user" events, as they are geared toward the war fighter. The Modern Day Marine exposition is focused more toward the acquisition and research and development community.

Bracken encourages Marines to set aside some time to visit Marine South. "The Marines do not have to register; they are welcome to just walk in. The uniform is just whatever the uniform of the day is [aboard Lejeune]. It's simple," he says.

For more information about Marine South, visit the exposition's Web site at www.marinemilitaryexpos.com.

Judy Robinson: Navy spouse, Hero at Home volunteer

Heather Owens
Carolina Living editor

Judy Robinson is a Navy spouse of 14 years and the assistant director of the United Service Organizations of North Carolina's Jacksonville location at 9 Tallman St.

When talking with her, it becomes immediately clear she has a passion for helping military members and their families. Either she or other USO colleagues and volunteers attend each deployment from the area, whether it is at 2 p.m. in the afternoon or 2 a.m. Each deploying service member receives a care package usually comprised of personal items, fun items and reading material.

Because of her passion for the military family, Jim Connors, the civilian publisher of Marine Corps Base Camp Lejeune's The Globe newspaper and Marine Corps Air Station New River's publication, The RotoVue, asked Robinson to become one of a handful of panel judges for the 2008 Military Spouse Awards known as Heroes at Home.

Robinson was pleased to accept the invitation to the request as it brought together each link in the USO mission.

"[Heroes at Home] definitely ties it all together, because it is bringing together dependents, the community, the military and the USO and it all links us to the mission statement of the USO," said Robinson, adding, "Anyway we can support the military member or the family member, we're there."

In talking about military life, Robinson said that it was quite different than the typical civilian lifestyle.

"Being a military spouse is completely different because our husbands, often based on duty, are called away from the home. We often have to act as both a mother and a father," said the mother of three.

Yet with the mission comes a certain amount of pride. "We are honored to have a spouse who makes a sacrifice in providing for both our country and our family at the same time," said Robinson.

Being such a strong supporter of the military community and a veteran military spouse, Robinson said she is pleased to have the opportunity to be a part of a process that honors military spouses. "I think it is a great opportunity to recognize another military spouse for something that I am very passionate about."

Editor's note: Nominations for the Heroes at Home Military Spouse Awards are currently being accepted on The Globe [www.campjeuneglobe.com] and The RotoVue [www.newriverrotovue.com] Web sites. Service members may nominate their spouses as a Hero at Home until midday Sunday. All military members Eastern North Carolina are eligible to nominate their spouse. Nominations have already been received from each of the services and the Coast Guard.

The nominees and their spouses will be invited to a luncheon May 15 at the Officers' Club aboard Camp Lejeune where the 2008 Military Spouse of the Year will be revealed.

The spouse of the year will receive a 42-inch flat screen television courtesy of USA Discounters. Additionally, the finalists will receive more than $5,000 in prizes.

Judy Robinson takes a break from handing out care packages to deploying Marines Friday to pose for a photograph. Heather Owens

Youngsters spread Easter joy

Heather Owens
Living editor

School of Infantry students and the Easter Bunny came in the form of a classroom of kindergarten students from Johnson Primary School. Tonya Day's kindergarten class created 376 camouflage Easter baskets for students who are away from home for the holiday.

"It's amazing what 5-year-olds can do on this day."

Day, who hails from the penultimate Marine Corps family (a former Marine, her spouse and mother of two), said she and her students wanted something special for the Marines.

"It turned into something a little bigger than we thought," she said. "We just didn't do something quietly for the Marines."

The class chose to make the baskets for SOI Marines as SOI is JPS' school of choice.

"I adopted JPS about three years ago and we continued the relationship to grow it stronger and stronger over the years," said Capt. Brandon Gorman, SOI company commander.

Gorman provides 20 SOI Marines, mostly from the rehabilitation platoon, to the school a couple times a week.

"They love it," said Gorman of his students. "They volunteer to go down to the school and they function kind of as a role model for those kids whose parents might be deployed."

For the elementary students, the visit had an added benefit of becoming part of the curriculum, encompassing such topics as math, social studies and literature.

"When we started this project, we were doing a lesson on wants and needs. The students were learning about supply and demand," said Day.

The children also learned about quality and quantity control. "When they were setting up the basket handles, the Marines made sure each one was facing the same way, like a factory [might do]," Day, adding that they knew the children would eventually slide their arms into the handles to carry the baskets to the SOI bus for transportation back to the school.

Beyond the curriculum, Day's students learned so much more than math and market demand. It is the intangible lessons which will live on in the students' hearts.

During a ceremony in their classroom Thursday, students stood and told the Marines how much they meant to them.

One little girl in a pink dress said, "Learning about supply and demand is fun, but we want to thank the Marines for what they do everyday."

Indeed, the SOI Marines have come to be important role models in these children's lives.

With many of the kindergarten's parents either deployed, preparing for deployment or recently returned, the SOI Marines present a constancy in the youngsters' lives.

"The kids are comforted by seeing the uniform," said Day. "They like that presence."

Pvt. Crystal Bruce, 19, of the SOI understands, with a younger brother at home, she enjoys being around children and the sense of home which they provide for her.

"They ask a lot of questions about what we do and if we ever see their parents," said Bruce.

Bruce, a regular volunteer, actually got to help the students with the Easter basket project. The students impressed her. "They are bright kids and they have high creativity levels," she said, adding, "Anyone who wants to volunteer, it will brighten their day. It reminds us what we're fighting for."

Day believes her students and the SOI students learn from each other, and that perhaps the SOI Marines do get something out of volunteering. "It's amazing, because the Marines come in here and my kids are making crafts, and they want to make crafts, too," she said.

For this day at least, Day and her kindergartners had the opportunity to brighten some Marines' spirits for the Easter holiday.

"It made me feel really good because I am really far away from home. To receive the Easter basket is a tradition that I do at home, so it gave me a warm feeling [to receive one of the baskets from the students]," said Pvt. Heather Quinn, 23.

Will the responsible designated drivers please stand up

Safety Tips

By Lisa Rivers
Semper Fit Health Promotion

I think it's fair to say that everyone knows to have a designated driver, more importantly, a responsible designated driver if they plan to consume alcohol. A responsible designated driver assures that at the end of the night, you are not playing "rock, paper, scissors" to figure out who has consumed the least amount of alcohol in order to decide who is going to drive. If this does happen, play it safe and use your Arrive Alive Card instead of getting in the car with someone who has been drinking.

Okay, so what makes a designated driver a "responsible" designated driver? Often times it's the smallest of adjustments which make all of the difference. In an Olympic race, usually the gold medalist only beats the silver and bronze medalist by a split second but the difference in prizes and recognition is astounding. So likewise, the difference between the designated driver and the responsible designated driver is only a small collection of details, but the difference in how the evening ends and is remembered can be astounding.

A responsible designated driver discusses the plan and his/her role before going out. He/she sets ground rules prior to everyone drinking. The responsible designated driver understands that an intoxicated person is not rational or reasonable so they set these guidelines and rules before the festivities begin.

The responsible designated driver stays sober. Most establishments will serve free soda if you are the designated driver. Our hero will ensure that everyone remains safe. He/she won't let their friends get too drunk, start fights, go home with strangers or go off on their own. Everyone who goes to the bar together stays together is the philosophy of the responsible designated driver.

When it's time to leave, how does the responsible designated driver behave? Well, he/she will ensure that everyone gets into the car and arrives home safely. Our hero will ensure that those who are intoxicated arrive at the right room. If his or her friends are intoxicated, he/she will lay them on their side to prevent them from choking or suffocating.

After getting them to their rooms, the responsible designated driver doesn't view his responsibilities to his friends as an event now antecedent in time. Instead he/she checks on them periodically throughout the night. Just because the person has stopped drinking or passed out doesn't mean that their blood alcohol levels have stopped rising. It takes your body approximately one hour to eliminate one standard drink, 12 ounce beer, 6 ounce wine, 1-1.5 ounce shot glass. The responsible designated driver checks the airway, breathing, and circulation (pulse) of his slumbering friends. If he/she notices that they are unresponsive, 911 is immediately dialed and cardiopulmonary resuscitation, or CPR, is initiated.

Drinking and driving is a very serious problem which affects every community within our nation including the military. Semper Fit Health Promotion hosts various evening briefings to help increase the awareness of Marines and sailors concerning related to alcohol. The Save a Life Tour, which was held aboard Camp Lejeune March 19 at Goettege Field, helped to educate individuals about the dangers of getting behind the wheel after consuming alcohol. The use of cutting-edge technology and state-of-the-art drinking and driving simulator.

For more information concerning any program or workshop offered by Semper Fit Health Promotion, call 451-286-1111 or visit www.mceslejeune.com/health/index.html.

Onslow County Public Library offers a series of culturally-diverse programs for children

Press release
Onslow County Public Library

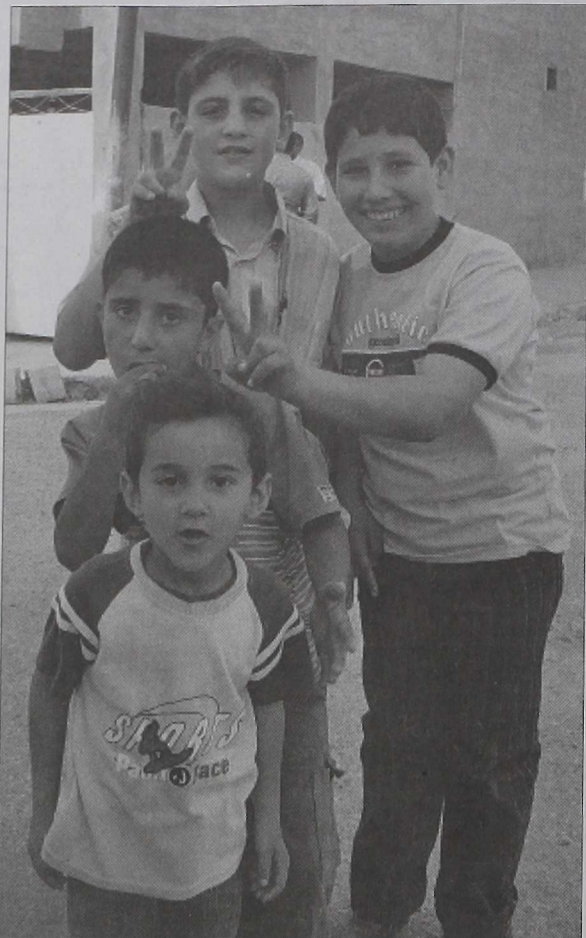

In honor of Celebrate Diversity Month and Month of the Military Child, school-aged children and their families are invited to Onslow County Public Library for a "Taste of Iraq ... for kids!" Children will learn about life in Iraq, particularly the city of Ramadi, through pictures, regional food and various cultural items.

Children will have the opportunity to make and taste food popular in Iraq as well as ask questions about the region and the people who live there from Maj. Lee Suttee, former U.S. Marine Corps Civil Affairs Chief in Ramadi. Suttee served as the Civil Affairs Detachment Commander in Ramadi, Iraq, from Feb. 2007 to Feb. 2008. In this capacity, Suttee worked with the mayor, city council and neighborhood councils to restore essential services and begin reconstruction across the city, which also brought him into contact with the citizens of Ramadi on a daily basis.

During his deployment, Suttee corresponded with students from North Carolina, Oklahoma, Michigan and Pennsylvania and answered their questions concerning Iraq. This program is free and open to the public and will be offered at the Main Library in Jacksonville April 8 at 6:30 p.m.; the Swansboro Branch Library April 10 at 6:30 p.m. and the Richlands Branch Library April 22 at 6:30 p.m.

Children of all ages are also invited to "Dia de Los Ninos/Los Libros" (Children's Day/Book Day) at both the Main Library in Jacksonville and the Richlands Branch Library April 30 at 7 p.m. Families will discover the many Spanish language resources offered through Onslow County Public Library, learn about Latino Culture, enjoy delicious "Pan de Tres Leches" (a butter cake flavored with vanilla) and receive a free children's book in Spanish.

It is both a daily commitment and an annual celebration, April 30, of the joys and wonders of childhood and the importance of family literacy. Dia's vision is to spread 'bookjoy' every day by linking children from all languages and cultures

Important changes credit reports for 2008

Tom Holcom
Special to The Globe

There are several changes coming in 2008 which will change how your credit score is determined, including some which offer you new ways to improve your score. Called FICO '08, a credit score measurement created by the Fair Isaac and Company, the changes also include another way to protect against identity theft.

Changes to your score

Financial experts agree that there are certain things which impact your score (listed in order of importance): payment history, amount owed, length of credit history, new credit and types of credit.

The old formula also put an emphasis on "hard inquiries," which occur when a lender looked at your report when you applied for a line of credit.

FICO '08 takes into account modern economic reality: More people use credit more often now than in the past. Because of this, hard inquiries won't bring down a score as much. Other changes include:

- More emphasis on:
 - Having a wider variety of credit accounts (positive)
 - Having high balances on your credit cards (negative)
- Less emphasis on:
 - Actively using the credit accounts you have (positive)
 - Applying for new credit accounts (negative)

The new model also minimizes the impact of "piggybacking" someone else's score. This is when someone with a good credit score adds someone with a poor score on a credit account as an "authorized user." FICO '08 will ignore "authorized users" on an account and focus on the actual account holders, including joint account holders.

A change to your rights

All consumers who fall victim to identity theft will now be able to "freeze" their credit report. This prevents access to the report, thus preventing criminals from opening new accounts. The downside is that each bureau charges $10 for the service, as well as a fee to "unfreeze" the report.

How to improve your score

There are several things you can do to increase your score.

Review your report — Since just one negative item can affect your score, make sure your report is accurate. You can get a free report once a year from all three bureaus at www.annualcreditreport.com. Note that this is the only legally able to give you free reports. There are other sites that claim to be able to do so, but they have been noted for fraud and charging you a fee.

Pay on time — The new scoring method puts more emphasis on missed or late payments. To prevent this, consider paying by allotment, or set up online payments to automatically send payments each month.

Keep balances low — FICO '08 penalizes you for using too much of your available credit. Try to keep it at around 30 percent of the credit limit.

Keep accounts open and active — In the past, closing unused accounts would lower your score by a small amount. Closed accounts will be a bigger hit to your score with FICO '08 because it puts a focus on those who actively and responsibly use credit. Keep your older, higher-limit accounts active by charging something each month, then paying the balance full when the bill arrives.

Piggyback the right way — If needed, be added as a "joint account holder" to a spouse's or loved one's positive credit account. Just remember that you will be responsible for the debt and may have difficulty getting removed from the account.

Consider an installment loan — Liz Pulliam Weston of MSN.com suggests that if you're having trouble paying down your credit card debt, an installment loan is "recommended" as a way for people with troubled credit to rehabilitate their scores since it adds variety to your credit choices.

Sex, Lies, Betrayal: Pornography, cybersex, sex addiction

Dealing with addictions
By Chaplain Michael D. Howard

Sexual addiction in general and pornography specifically, is a rapidly growing problem in the military and in our society. To fully understand the scope of the issue, one only has to look at a few relevant statistics (www.internet-filter-review.com):

- More than 70 percent of men from 18 to 34 visit a pornographic site in a typical month
- The total porn industry revenue for 2006 was $13.3 billion in the United States and $97 billion worldwide
- There are 72 million unique worldwide users visiting adult Web sites monthly

- 100,000 Web sites offer illegal child pornography, and as of December 2005, child pornography was a $3 billion annual industry
- Ten percent of adults admit to having an internet sexual addiction. Of this number, 28 percent are women
- Women are considered to be the fastest growing group of sex addicts in the United States
- Children ages 12-17 are the most frequent viewers of Internet pornography

Sex, like other addictions, develops and is maintained through a process that is observable, describable and progressive in nature. It begins with the person's belief system (i.e., how they view their world and the people in it). These beliefs are molded over time through introspection and are influenced by the societal factors of family, friends, media, church and schools. These beliefs directly impact the person's fantasies which in turn comprise what some researchers have called the "arousal template."

This template is an integration of various aspects of a person's fantasy, consists of everything related to what the person is aroused by sexually, and is different for each individual. Body types, body parts, physical characteristics, clothing, personality, intelligence, mannerisms and ways of interacting are all elements of the template. This arousal template is accessed during the addiction process in what is referred to as preoccupation. This constitutes the cognitive part of addiction and involves aspects of thought and fantasy. Studies have shown that sex addicts spend a large amount of time in this area of the addiction cycle (Carnes, 2001).

From preoccupation the addict moves to "ritualization." Ritualization is considered the preparation for the actual sexual act. Examples can include trying to make sure the house is empty so that he or she can get online without distractions. It may also include buying better or faster computer equipment, physically moving the computer to a more remote location or getting a separate credit card to make online transactions.

The next stage of the addiction cycle is the actual sexual act. This includes any sexual behavior that is part of the addiction. It can also include sexual activity with a spouse or significant other if it is done in conjunction with other acting out behavior. For instance, a man might get online, look at pornography or chat with women and then initiate sex with his own wife. This sexual behavior with his wife could then be considered part of the cycle because it is connected to the pornography or chatting.

Oftentimes this stage is followed by a period of despair, guilt or shame. During this stage, the person may feel so low emotionally they actually contemplate committing suicide and may even use additional acting out behavior as a way to deal with these feelings of hopelessness. From here the addiction cycle moves to the final stage, that of "unmanageability." Simply put, these are the consequences of the addiction. The time and energy spent on the addiction may affect relationships with loved ones and financial or legal problems, impact spirituality and relationship with God. Additionally, it may interfere with job performance and employment. Regardless of the potential byproducts of the obsessive act, the addict will continue to live out the cycle because they are not in control — the addiction is.
