Barracks Visit

The Marine Barracks Screening Team will be here Aug. 23 and 24 seeking highly qualified Marines. They are looking for privates through staff sergeants to serve as ceremonial marchers, platoon sergeants and world famous" body bearers.

Marines who are interested must meet specified requirements as outlined in the Aug. 1 message from HQMC. For more information, call the II MEF Career Planner Office at 451-8048.

Special Thanks

THE GLOBE Staff would like to thank everyone who made it possible for us to be in Sneads Ferry on Saturday and Sunday for its community 'Shrimp Festival.'

It was our honor to meet each of you who stopped by our tent. If your community is hosting an

It's summer in the Mojave, and Marines from II Marine Expeditionary Force are here participating in the most recent Combined Arms Exercise. As was reported this time last year by Public Affairs officer 1st Lt. Dan McSweeney, "There are answers, it seems, in the desert." As this is my first trip to the wonderful world of CAX, I took the lieutenant's comment to heart and traveled here in search of answers of my Question 2: Where did all these degrees come from? In my biggest understatement yet, it's really hot here! But why? The only thing I can think of is that perhaps the Mojave is being used as a storage space for the heat that has been taken away from North Dakota. For the sake of those chilly North Dakotans, I would suggest you find out why your state is being punished with crippling cold all the dang time and fix the problem. It would make for a more climate-friendly nation.

Question 3: Where are the chili-dogs? I have believed for a long time that the off-ignored Eleventh Commandment read, "Thou shalt not forgo the right to consume chili dogs." Yet here,

Courage To Prepare for Combat

One who hopes to lead others through times of physical risk must first face the risk himself and demonstrate the courage that will inspire others to follow. Gen. Carl E. Mundy, the 30th Commandant of the Marine Corps, aptly defines courage this way

But the only way you can advertise for God is through his agent, God the son, Jesus Christ prayed for all who would ever believe, "Father, I

Military has fewer deaths

Sgt. M.V. Trindade

Every year the Marine Corps is faced with an enemy known as suicide. To date, there have been 17 suicides this calendar year in the Marine Corps. Although the U.S. Military has fewer suicides each year than the civilian populace, "suicides are the second leading cause of death in the Marines following accisaid Navy Lt. Nisha Robbins, dents," Headquarters Marine Corps Suicide Prevention Manager for the Marine Corps. "When we match the Marines up demographically to civilians we see that the Marines are at a lower risk to commit sui-cide, however, the Marines still have the highest suicide rate of the Armed Forces."

It is for this reason that the Department of the Navy has launched an effort to address and educate Marines and Sailors on preventative techniques to help curb suicide in the Naval Services.

"Early prevention helps; it doesn't hurt," reads a section of the Department of the Navy All-hands Training Facilitator Kit, one of the initiatives the Department of the Navy has taken to try to curb this killer. Problems left unattended can spiral out of control and may result in tragedy

The training kit, "Suicide Prevention: Taking Action, Saving Lives," was developed in part to get everyone in the Navy and Marine Corps to have a standardized training program, Robbins explained.

The training package was developed with real-life scenarios in mind and includes a video with issues ranging from a Marine being passed over for promotion to someone whose personal relationship fell apart

The training kit is designed to be a selfcontained entity so anyone can give the presentation. It includes an 18-minute video, suggested lecture, transparencies, and answers to frequently asked questions about suicide which may aid in clearing up common fears, such as talking with someone about suicide or knowing how to get someone help. The kits were mailed out in October 2000. However, if your unit did not receive one, you can order the kit from www.usmc-mccs.org/perssvc/prevent/prevention_main.asp.

Follow the links and request PIN #806377. Only one kit can be ordered and it must be shipped to a military address. Marines and Sailors must become aware of warning signs that may signal a potentially hazardous situation.

Some Marines view suicidal tendencies as someone trying to malinger or get out of doing something, explained Robbins. "All the branches (of the Armed Forces) need to improve in getting help for someone," Robbins said. "Put your personal beliefs

SAN DIEGO - Each year between 90 to 100 enlisted Marines come to the Marine Enlisted Commissioning (MECEP) Education Program Preparatory School at Marine Corps Recruit Depot, San Diego, to prepare themselves for the challenges they will face at Officer's Candidate School in Quantico, Va. The prep school is the first step for enlisted Marines who have met the requirements of the Marine Enlisted Commissioning Program and chose to become commissioned officers. At the prep school they are familiarized with what to expect during their training as officer candidates.

"Our goal here is to assist (MECEP students) in the transition from serving in the Fleet Marine Force to an academic environment.' Chief Warrant Officer Wendy J. Willis, personnel officer, MECEP prep. "This helps the candidates when they attend their universities. We also prepare them for the physical rigors of OCS through a challenging physical fitness program.'

During the eight weeks the Marines spend at MECEP prep, they attend classes in English composition, western civilization, physics, chemistry, physical science, college algebra, precalculus, applied calculus and a review "The toughest part was getting used to going to class again," said recent MECEP prep graduate, Sgt. Timothy D. Hawkins. "You have to be in the right mindset to go to class. MECEP prep helped me get back into good study habits."

Currently, the former infantryman attends San Diego University as an anthropology major. He will receive his Marine Corps commission in two years when he finishes his degree program.

"Following their training at MECEP prep, the Marines move on to universities across the country to pursue their baccalaureate degree," Willis said. Eastern Carolina Harriers provide air mission for first time since 1999

VMA-542 awakens their sleeping "Tigers" in preparation for another ordnance delivery at Combined Arms Exercise-9.

Cpl. Mike Vrabel arine Combat Corresp.

WENTYNINE PALMS, Calif. - For the first time since 1999, T the Tigers are roaring in the Mojave.

Marine Attack Squadron-542, based at Marine Corps Air Station Cherry Point, N.C., arrived at Combined Arms Exercise-9 recently and has been helping Marine Air Ground Task Force-2 accomplish its mission from the air.

This desert training provides a rare opportunity for Harrier pilots to unleash their payloads of explosive fury

"Out West is the only place we can drop live ordnance," said VMA-542 pilot Capt. Steve R. Schnur. "It makes things more realistic.

When delivering ordnance here, the squadron doesn't play alone. Each ordnance drop is one of many moving parts in the combined arms training, which can mean an increased stress level for the solo pilots.

"We really have to be on our game out here," said Schnur, who explained if the timing of a bombing run is off, even by one minute, it can disrupt all aspects of an exercise, including artillery and mortar fires.

"We are just one piece of the puzzle," agreed Capt. Luis E. Villalobos, also a pilot for VMA-542.

Training in the midst of the MAGTF's many warfighting elements makes CAX a unique experience for the Tigers.

"On the East Coast, it's like we train in a vacuum," said Allentown, Pa. native Schnur. "We train, but not in coordination with other units. According to Villalobos, an added advantage to training in the desert is the lack of flying wildlife that can cause damage to an aircraft. "In North Carolina, you have to worry about bird strikes," explained Villalobos, who hails from Rockville, Md. "He practice low altitude flying.

One of the few disadvantages to training here is the lapplies. According to Cpl. Jason M. Curl of Monroe, Wis. longer to reach the squadron after they are ordered. "We've been getting (Cherry Point) to send us parts fro there," said Curl, part of the aviation life support maintenere. "We can also use parts off of jets here."

Despite the slow supplies, the squadron is taking full ac the desert environment and the training they get back hon "This is like nothing on the East Coast," said pilot Ca Curtsinger, from Lexington, Ky. "We've all had training, to use it out here.' The Marines of VMA-542 will take their Harriers' spec power into the Final Exercise (FINEX), the last training e CAX, before returning to Cherry Point later this month.

Brings new meaning to the term 'Hot Spot'

Story and photos by 1st Lt. William F. Klumpp

WENTYNINE PALMS, Calif. - In summer, the Mojave Desert is a big, hot spot, but in Crash Fire Rescue (CFR) terms the "hot spot" is that place on the expeditionary airfield here where a crew stands ready to respond when needed. Fourteen CFR Devil Dogs with Marine Wing Support Squadron-274 at MCAS Cherry Point, along with their brothers from MWSS-374 here, keep the watch as rotary and fixed wing birds fly day and night during Combined Arms Exercise-9.

It's about 10 a.m., and the current hot spot crew of three has managed to find a bit of shade in which to escape the onslaught of burning sun. From inside their P19 fire rescue vehicle, the CFR Marines watch the flight line come alive with AV-8B Harriers, CH-46E Sea Knights, CH-53E Super Stallions, AH-1W Cobras and UH-1N Hueys. All the aircraft depart without incident. The only responses so far at CAX-9 have been for hot brakes

According to the Pasadena, Md. warrior, the time spent at CAX has been a break for the Carolina Marines

"It's good to get this field experience, but it is also a good break from the hectic pace at Cherry Point," states Meise, adding the calls they get at Cherry Point are commonly for hot brakes, low fuel and hydraulic failures.

Although they may not be keeping the tempo they do back home, these guys are watching the field for long hours and maintain a readiness to respond at any time.

"We are out here (hot spot) whenever any bird starts up," says crewmember Lance Cpl. Javier Negron, also with MWSS-274. The Villalba, Puerto Rico native adds that it is not unusual to find them here at 1:30 a.m. due to the nature of the CAX air operations. Rounding out the crew of three is driver and veteran CAXer Lance Cpl. Michael S. Cruz, with MWSS-374. Cruz is witnessing his thirteenth CAX, while Meise and Negron are on their first trip to the desert training area

Cruz, who hails from Lowellville, Ohio, says that he hears a lot about the operations at Cherry Point and the Marines there

"don't miss it." This portion will be used as they cut in scenes from last year's event. The intent according to Church was to tell people time was running short; the event is coming.

In the second commercial, Johnson instructed local recruiters in a variety of exercises while telling them that "he better see them at the event." He did.

The local Johnson City recruiters, as part of the commercial package, will be one of the main vendors at the event.

"The commercials and events are giving the Marine Corps some due exposure in this area," said Staff Sgt. Brian Garland, former recruiter in Johnson City who left for Marine Corps Base Quantico, Va. in June. He added that Recruiting Substation Johnson City has undergone some drastic changes in personnel over the past year and it will be beneficial now that the new recruiters are in place. "This was a different experience for all of us and unlike anything we have done before."

Ironically, the whole package was the result of a friend of Garland's who also knew Church. This friend put the two in touch and the rest is history

Church is also instrumental in pushing a strong public service announcement program for the Marine Corps within their station and the Marine Corps Reserve's Toys for Tots program.

The commercials will run over a sixweek period providing the Marines with more than $15,000 in advertising. The Marine Corps paid nothing, but received a lot in return

Our 10th Marine Regiment's Howitzers, which routinely fire on Camp Lejeune, use an approximately six-inch shell. Hence, we believe our test-firing will prove the noise levels from the naval gunfire will be comparable - if not, indeed, less than what we are routinely accustomed to.

Our testing will take place only after an initial environmental assessment has been successfully completed. Again, this is in addition to a programmatic environmental assessment for subsequent, recurring SFCP training. Our commitment to protecting plant, wildlife and habitat remains constant

During this past week, I have visited several area elected officials and other community leaders to explain, well in advance, exactly what it is we aim to do in regard to Shore Fire Control Party Training. I pledge to continue to approach my duties in an atmosphere of openness and would hope to use forums such as this one again. Certainly I appreciate the opportunity afforded me by our hometown newspaper to bring to our fellow citizens' attention an initiative which I believe gives their Marines critical training without detriment to our shared quality of life.

COURAGE from 2A =

mustering enough courage to overcome it.

For example, deployed forces are in constant danger of biological and chemical attack, yet units rarely conduct realistic training to react to nuclear, biological, and chemi-cal (NBC) weapons. Because NBC weapons produce such horrific effects on the battlefield, our Marines must be made aware of what to expect and how to react. The sights and sounds of combat are shocking to the uninitiated, yet the ability to conduct realistic combined arms and live fire exercises has been diminished by environmental constraints and civilian complaints. The courageous leader must be resolute and creative to overcome the growing number of challenges to effective training.

Although the Marine Corps depends on its general officers and civilian leadership to reverse some of these trends, all leaders can accomplish much. Courageous leaders will not shrink from the responsibility of setting up realistic training, despite the obstacles. For example, they will find ways to conduct NBC training within other field exercises. They will take what combined arms training is available and not fire a single live round until mastery is first achieved on the chalkboard, on the sand table, and in dry-run field exercises. Leaders must have the courage to realistically prepare themselves and their Marines to be proficient in their duties. Doing so will enhance the capabilities of the unit and prepare the individual to overcome the more daunting challenges present in combat.

Courage To Correct What Is Wrong

Mundy admonishes us that courage involves doing what is right. Implicit in the idea of doing what is right is making tough decisions. Courageous leaders will always adhere to the slogan "mission first, people always." They will realize that preparing Marines for combat is their first responsibility. They will not take Marines away from this preparation, to perform camp maintenance and manage camp facilities unless they have no choice.

Courageous leaders deliver necessary criticism. They also ensure that subordinates go back and execute their tasks correctly. Courageous leaders are not tempted to take the easy way out by choosing to fix problems some other time. For example, when tasks are not performed to the required standard during a field exercise, the courageous, leader will correct the deficiency and immediately insist that the task be repeated until the standard is met. In contrast, those lacking in courage will deliver a polite evaluation and hope to do better next time. In the long run, the courage displayed by the leader to ensure that his subordinates do things the right way causes his Marines to become more proficient. This increased proficiency equates togreater unit cohesion and, finally, to courage and victory on. the battlefield.

Courage To Speak the Truth

Courageous leaders speak the truth. If they are required to evaluate the performance of another Marine, give an opinion, or assess a situation, they do not shrink from the task. They realize that criticism can serve as the catalyst for change. They know that subordinates depend on the coaching and honest evaluations that their leaders provide on their Courage, then, is not a comfortable feeling. Speaking the truth may involve deflating a subordinate, momentarily damaging a peer relationship, or speaking up to a superior. However, all leaders must remember that failure to speak the truth is disloyalty to themselves, to their Marines, and to their units. As Lt. Gen. Victor H. Krulak, former commanding general of Fleet Marine Force, Pacific, wrote in his November 1986 Gazette article:

The essence of loyalty is the courage to propose the unpopular, coupled with a determination to obey, no matter how distasteful the ultimate decision. And the essence of leadership is the ability to inspire such behavior.

An honest opinion, tactfully spoken, is of the greatest value to both subordinates and seniors. Senior leaders must have the courage to create an atmosphere where the truth is welcome.

Courageous leaders are unafraid to prepare themselves and their Marines to face the enemy. They have the courage to correct what is wrong and decisively choose the right course, although it may be more difficult and time consuming. They are guided by conscience, not comfort. They lis-ten to subordinates, speak candidly to seniors, and cast aside popularity for what is right. We cannot hope to be courageous under fire without striving for a higher standard in peace. Mundy noted that courage enables a Marine to take that extra step. That extra step makes all the difference.

Lejeune remembers war vets

Gunnery Sgt. Brenda Donnell

The Korean War, wedged between World War II and the Vietnam War, is often referred to as the "forgotten war." The Marine Corps plans to change that perception when it honors and remembers all Korean War veterans during a major event at Camp Lejeune Sept. 21.

"(This commemorative) will be the most important event in (these veterans) lives since they served in Korea," said retired Marine Sgt. Maj. George F. Meyer. "The active Marine force and the retired force have never forgotten any Marine who has served in our Corps."

This so-called forgotten war began June 25, 1950, when 135,000 North Korean soldiers invaded South Korea. Two days later, President Harry S. Truman deployed the 7th Fleet and Gen. Douglas McArthur asked for the 1st Marine Division to prevent the spread of the Korean War to other Far East countries.

Meyer said Marine Corps ranks were at an all-time low when active-duty and reservist Marines were recalled to defend South Korea.

"At the end of Word War II, there were 455,000 enlisted Marines. We were down to 75,000 Marines when North Korea crossed the border," said Meyer.

Most of the 75,000 Marines were assigned to ships, naval shipyards, recruiting stations and reserve units, Meyer continued. In addition, active-duty and reserve Marines were spread far and wide.

"When the reservists were called up, they put them on trains traveling cross-country, picking up Marines at various train stations along the way," he said. "I left, by train, for the West Coast from Quantico where I was stationed."

Just as they were spread out in 1950, surviving Korean War veterans now reside in all states and some in other countries. Getting them all together again is a challenge made easier by having this event at Camp Lejeune, Meyer said, because it is a well-known military installation.

Lejeune's commemorative is part of the on going activities of the Navy, Marine Corps and Coast Guard to recognize these service members and their families throughout the Congressionally authorized U.S. 50th Anniversary Korean War Commemoration.

Senior Marine Corps and Navy leaders, including Marine Corps Commandant Gen. James L. Jones are expected to attend along with hundreds of Korean conflict veterans.

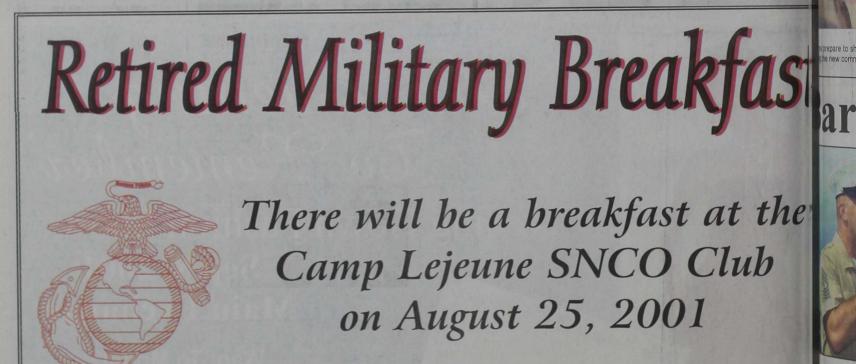

To register or for more information about Camp Lejeune's Korean War Commemorative, call Capt. Paul F. Halliwell or Gunnery Sgt. James C. Riley at (910) 451-1714 or visit www.lejeune.usmc.mil/korea1951.

RADIOMEN from 1A =

now, are expected to be radio operators too. When the Williamsport, Md. native, first came into the fleet, he expected he would be doing wireman work; stuff like running communications line between the command post and the forward positions of the platoons

"Never did I dream I was going to be with a line company or going out to the field," said "I never expected the work to be that demanding of me

Danfelt explained that a radio operator must work hard to hold on to that title.

"Being attached to a line company, no time was afforded for me to loaf or take my time learning my job," said Danfelt. "If you're not up to speed and you can't do your job, they'll replace you with someone who can."

That wasn't the case in Lance Cpl. John M. Odle's platoon, but the rifleman with India Company explained just like the importance of filling the squad leader and fire team leader positions, radioman positions have to be filled,

"What happened to me was I walked into the company office one day," said Odle. "My staff sergeant said 'You're a radio operator.' As a Marine you take the ball and run with it." The Marine from West Frankfurt, Ill., said as an infantryman you'd better have some knowledge of the radio because, "at any time a guy like me could get killed or wounded in combat." Any Marine or hospital corpsman from his platoon has at least basic knowledge of the radio, Odle said.

"My personal view is a well trained radio operator will save your butt in combat," said Lance Cpl. James E. Cox, India Company grenadier.

"What we kid about in the field and what they actually are are two different things. We always kid around and call them 'grunt-pogs. In the rear they don't do grunt things, but in the field they're just as much infantrymen as we are

Cox recalls a time that even during live fire training a radio operator stopped a potentially dangerous situation. The Alexandria, Minn. Marine, explained that two platoons were moving to a point at a 90-degree angle. He said, Danfelt, his radioman, noticed the situation and had enough initiative to immediately radio the other platoon and tell them to shift fire.

"The importance of having a well trained radio operator is, they're your link between what needs to be done and what you're doing, Sometimes field radio operators speak directly to their high command, it even hap-pens in the MEU. The Landing Forces Operations Center aboard the USS Bataan (LHD-5) is the center of communication for the 26th MEU. Go to the communications table and who will you find ... none other than a field radio operator.

"The LFOC acts like a heart for communication, it constantly pumps information out to the rest of its body," said Cpl. Joshua G. Deets, 26th MEU communications field radio operator.

The Colorado Springs, Colo. native said units that deploy from the MEU report back to the LFOC and he reports to the watch officer who decides which direction the information needs to flow, like a multi-valve aorta.

Deets chuckled, even with today's computer technology and information super highway the MEU could not hold good communications without radio operators in the LFOC. The units in the field aren't e-mailing back information to us, they're using field radios and satellite communications, said Deets

However, Deets said that some of their communications is very high-tech.

"As long as the satellite communications operator has the ability to hit a satellite from where he is, we can talk to him on the other side of the world," said Deets.

Lance Cpl. Romell B. Gaffney, 26th MEU communications radio operator, said his missions are mainly with the line companies. The Charleston, S.C. native, a satellite communicator, said the thing about being a radio operator is, "You have no limitations ... everyone needs a radio operator.

He said even though satellite communication is high-tech, it's not difficult to use. It's still a radio.

Gaffney recalls an experience, which showed him the importance of his specific radio and the simplicity of using it.

"We were riding in the tracs (amphibious assault vehicles) going on a mission," said

Gaffney. "I think I was on stand-by just incase something went down. We reached the objective point and waited with the command vehicle until the objective was cleared, they still hadn't used me. We were in the AAV heading back to the ship through a landing zone doing blackout operations

During blackout operations it's harder to see because of the use of night vision goggles. While navigating through the brush one of the tracs got an inch thick steel cable caught in the track wheel

"The cable made us late for our deadline to get back on the ship," said Gaffney. He explained that everyone with a radio, field or vehicle-mounted, was trying to communicate with the ship to no avail. Then the company commander told Gaffney to breakout his sat comm. In seconds the commander was talking to the ship.

"A lot of times you go through the Marine Corps feeling it's an everyday thing, 9-to-5," explained Gaffney. "But when someone's in trouble and you can help, it makes you feel like your job actually counts

Although it was a satellite radio that saved the day in that instance, Cpl. John M. Cochran, 26th MEU communications multichannel equipment operator, can tell you the advantages of having a vehicle mounted radio.

Cochran, native of Goodwater, Ala., recalling his missions back at 2d Light Armored Reconnaissance, said a major advantage of vehicle-mounted radios are that they have a further range than field radios, plus they need no batteries. The radios run off the vehicle's power

Cochran said this kind of range and unlimited power is essential for the missions that LAR is assigned, many times sending back reconnaissance from the field while away from the rest of the command for weeks.

An occasion where a field radio would be essential in vehicles and directly aiding the mission of units is with Low Altitude Air Defense teams.

The teams use both shoulder and vehiclemounted Stinger missiles for air defense. The visual signal that the teams receive is sent to and from a field radio, said Cpl. Dale Payer, 26th MEU communications field radio operator from Cincinnati.

"The radio is a vital link," said P enables them to track on the airc through encrypted signal, tell if the friend or foe

Payer said an interesting fact abour radio operator with a LAAD unit is operator must have immense knowled craft, both foreign and domestic.

"Convoys and other units deploy field will be protected from air strike of the radios used by LAAD tear Payer.

Some radio operators might think is simple because of the repetitiv they're going through the steps. W average military occupation special operators may seem to have their h depending on their true job title.

Ground radio repairmen are the me the scenes at times, although they o the title radioman, too. Cpl. D Courtney, 26th MEU ground radio re said some changes are being made in

The Denham Springs, La. Marine his MOS title is now non-existent; he operator/maintainer. He said the o between him and a radio operator is si operator is like a taxi driver operator/maintainer is more like a J mechanic. He explained that his origi ground radio repairman, would be cc to an engine mechanic.

"Training us to that level was no time efficient for the Marine Cor Courtney. "There is a lot of cross-t the comm. field. People ask you what they don't care if you're a wireman nician, if it's a phone or a radio, they to be able to fix it."

This striving for communication s seems to be felt by all radio operators nicians. Just as the field radioman is, in the camaraderie and spirit of the g whom he patrols, even '03' cross-tra Odle share that need for superior cotion.

"If we, as radio operators, are con just being good," said Odle. "We mission of the Marine Corps."

Marines line up to prove they have what it takes

Sgt. Bobbie J. Bryant

CAMP. JOHNSON - The search is on to find America's new hero and local Marines lined up to prove they have what it takes at casting call here recently.

J. Walter Thompson is in the process of making the new commercial, which is scheduled to air January 2002

Traditionally, Marine Corps advertising is renowned for depicting adventurous, dragon-slaying, mystical, warrior-spirited, fightand-survive heroes. According to Gary M. Sayers, district supervi-sor, Account Services, J. Walter Thompson, the new one will match the intensity and sprit of the previous advertisements but with a new direction.

The action, sword salute and transformation will remain but we are targeting a new "millennial" generation now, Sayers stated. 'Unlike generation 'X,' the young people today are more group orient-They want to work together as a team and not as individuals.

Adding a group of Marines somewhere in the commercial vice a lone ranger will demonstrate that it takes teamwork to accomplish the mission, he stated.

"This is the first spot in a commercial for the Marine Corps where an enlisted Marine will be the hero," Sayers said.

Using an enlisted hero may help with retention and it represents the larger percentage of recruits, Sayers

The casting call was for a mixed group of Marines, but those with rock-climbing skills were sought after more aggressively, according

"We are looking for a Marine that is the stereotypical Marine image of the intelligent, tough, elite warrior," Sayers added.

"A real Marine is used in every advertisement. It has always been that way and it will remain like that," he said. "What more perfect example of a hero is there than a Marine?

Without giving away the surprise element of the new commercial, Marines can look forward to seeing it intertwine with history, the brotherhood of the Corps will remain while you witness the individual metamorphose into something larg-er than himself, Sayers stated.

"It will speak to all the Marines of past, present and future," said Shaun Campbell, assistant producer, Broadcast Production, J. Walter Thompson. "It's spirit paves the way for new Marines and will recruit the Corps of tomorrow."

irst Battalion, 6th Marine Regiment's key volunteers' new home away from home opened recently.

While their Marines are deployed or training here, the command has a lounge where spouses can read The Fourragere, 1/6 key volunteer newsletter, surf the Internet and send e-mail to their loved ones, said Sgt. Troy J. Neas, family readiness staff noncommissioned officer.

"The key volunteers deserve a professional work space because of the value they give us," said Lt. Col. David C. Fuquea, battalion commander. "This room will give them the place they need to ensure our families will be taken care of."

"The command has really shown its complete support to the key volunteers," said Carrie S. Smith, a key volunteer and editor of The Fourragere. "They built us a very classy place for our meetings with all the resources that a key volunteer organization needs.

According to Neas, the battalion did not spend any money on the lounge. "We turned our CMCC (classified material control center) into a homey room in about a month at no extra cost," he said.

Base Property gave some furniture to the battalion and other furnishings were donated to the battalion.

"Base Property supported us 110 percent," said Sgt. Maj. Tony R. Frank, 1/6 sergeant major. Although the room is not officially in use yet, a few key volunteers have already visited it, said

Neas, who maintains the lounge. "The 'Spartan' furniture found in infantry battalions isn't homey," said Fuquea. "If it feels like home the wives are more apt to use the room."

He ran a 10K race last week and it was very hot.

He finished the race complaining of nausea and later got a really bad Could he be dehydrat headache. He drinks gallons of water before he runs.

Thanks, E. L.

Dear E. L.

Your husband could have been suffering from a syndrome called "water intoxication "

Let me explain this: all the literature we have for exercise physiology points out the need to take in fluids before, during and after exercise.

However, in many instances, the recommended fluid is plain water, and this can be a problem.

During prolonged exercise in hot and/or humid weather, excessive intake of plain water can produce a serious medical complication known as "hyponatremia". This is also called water intoxication.

Hyponatremia exists when the sodium level in the blood drops too low, which triggers symptoms ranging from mild (like headache, cramping confusion, or nausea) to severe (seizures, coma, pulmonary edema,

The most likely scenarios to induce hyponatremia would be such things as

For example, relatively untrained individuals tend to sweat a lot when exercising, and their sweat tends to contain more sodium (the trained human body tends to conserve sodium).

Consequently, these untrained individuals will lose more serum sodium an individual Health Corner beginning an exercise pro-LT. CMDR. PAT gram after fol-ROSE lowing a low sodium diet is risk for hyponatremia

Also.

And finally (and one of the biggest concerns), frequent intake of large quantities of sodium-free fluids like water during prolonged exercise can lead to hyponatremia

What? How can drinking plenty of water before, during, and after one exercises cause hyponatremia and lead to "water intoxication"?

Plain water or sodium-free fluids are rapidly absorbed from the gut and will dilute the concentrations of sodium in the blood.

This decrease in the blood sodium level then causes tremendous amounts

Thus the term "water intoxication" named after the symptoms of excessive urination found when an individual imbibes in too much alcohol!

How does one correct this? Exercise physiologists recommend refraining from over hydration during exercise in heat stress and adding a small amount of sodium to the fluids one ingests.

Also, the inclusion of some glucose in the fluid will also help correct dehydration. The best bet is probably one of the low-glucose sports drinks lil Gatorlode, or Exceed. like

Keep in mind these issues and guidelines are for those individuals ustaining prolonged exercise under heat stress conditions or those indi viduals who may be susceptible to hyponatremia during exercise, as outlined in the second paragraph above.

I would suggest your husband use a mild sports drink as his fluid of choice during his hot weather workouts.

Cpl. Valerie A. Martinez

Not in my unit, not in my Marine Corps, not in my community and not in my family.

That's the stance Gunnery Sgt. Coy C. Ferrell has taken on the issue of domestic violence - and he's not alone "Unfortunately, the incidents of family violence occur both in American Marine Corps. Such FAMILY ADVOCACY WHEEL behavior is unacceptable in our Corps, and renewed efforts at eliminating child and spouse abuse are aggressively underway," said former Commandant Gen. Carl E. Mundy Jr. in a 1993 letter addressed to the men and women of the Corps.

Though eight years have passed since Mundy first set the standard, efforts to prevent and educate Marines, Sailors and their family and friends are still at the forefront of Corps issues, and with the 4th Annual Camp Lejeune Domestic Violence Conference right around the corner, Ferrell is spreading the word.

The prevention specialist with the Prevention and Education Department cent of males are more likely to grow said domestic violence is

In order to prevent violence, family intervene and pro-tect victims and hold offenders accountable for their actions, Marine the Corps established the Family Advocacy Program. "Domestic violence is the prob-lem, and FAP is the Tomb Raider became one of this summer's biggest hits.

AMERICA'S SWEETHEART

America's Sweetheart (PG-13) is a romantic comedy about a Hollywood couple that breaks up after finishing a film together. But they are forced into pretending they are getting back together to avoid a negative backlash that could jeopardize the success of

Catherine Zeta-Jones (The Mask of Zorro, Entrapment) and John Cusack (Pushing Tin, High Fidelity) play the Hollywood couple who must keep the peace between Gwen and Eddie and their public image intact, but Kiki is soon faced with a more personal concern as her longtime friendship with Eddie begins to take a romantic turn.

Among the juicy ensemble cast are Christopher Walken as a controlfreak director; Hank Azaria (Bird Cage) as Gwen's latin lover, Hector; and Stanley Tucci as the eccentric studio boss

Crystal says, "America's Sweetheart is a farce about adultery and greed and sex and all that kind of stuff."

America's Sweetheart, which was directed by Joe Roth (Coupe de Ville) and co-written and produced by Crystal, is sadly disappointing.

With such an outstanding cast and the possibility of a great plot by going behind the scenes of a movie press junket, this movie had promise of being entertaining and funny. It turned out somewhat ridiculous and spins out of

MCINTYRE from 1C =

for a strong family base, McIntyre said he can "definitely identify with that," noting that his family has given him a "huge source of strength."

Although he isn't used to "hanging tough" with the Marines, the singer admitted he thought it would be 'cool" to go through the "physical rigors of boot camp – just for a day." McIntyre is used to playing huge stadiums but says he enjoys these smaller venues because "they are more intimate, and people can get to know you more.

He opened the show with "Stay the Same," which was his first solo single from his 1999 album of the same name. He also sang another song, Love You Came Too Late," off the same album. Fans participated by singing the chorus along with him. The Boston native joked with the fans, establishing a great rapport with the crowd. Because the concert was open to the public, fans came from as far as New York and Louisiana to see him perform. I asked one of his die hard fans Kristin Greene, also of Boston, why she would travel so far to see McIntyre perform. She said, "His music changed life. The messages in 'Stay the Same' and 'Rain' helped me determine what to do with my life."

The pop star sang his current sir "Rain," which is off his new CD Meet Joe Mac. For this song McIntyre brought out his guitar and strummed while he belted out the chorus. I thought this was one of the highlights of his show because it really showcased the range of his harmonic voice as he sang such a powerful message. "Rain" is a song about finding out who you are and being true to vourself.

Only true New Kids fans would have recognized the song "Cover Girl." Originally sung by the quintet back in the late 80's, it was a fun, upbeat song. McIntyre sang it at Sand Jam as a beautiful ballad, making his die-hard fans go crazy. His final song, "With a Girl Like You," brought the females in the crowd to a frenzy.

The day was an awesome opportu-nity for service members and families in Eastern North Carolina to enjoy a day of fun in the sun and raised the bar for Sand Jam 2002.

ven with two players down with Einjuries, Camp Lejeune's Rugby Team, 'The Misfits,' still made it to the championship game of the Bele Chere Festival 7's Tournament, recently held in Asheville. They came home with a second place finish after losing the final game, 35-5, to Camp Carolina.

The 7's Tournament featured summer rugby play, with only seven players com-peting on a regulation size field versus the usual 15 players during regular season play

With overcast skies and rainy conditions, the Misfits opened the first match against Charlotte. They muffed the ball on the kickoff and Charlotte quickly capitalized, by scoring a try (touchdown) but missed the point after attempt.

The Misfits tightened up and in the first half, and scrum half, Brian McCue, of 1/6, gave a perfect pass to undefended tight head prop, Burnie Matthews. Matthews of Headquarters Battalion, 2d MarDiv, rumbled down the side lines to even the score, 5-5

But one of two tough breaks the Misfits had to overcome during the tournament came early Losing their Edwin Forrest suited up and biggest and most helped the Misfits defeat experienced playthe Raleigh Wolverines. er, and one of only eight players for the game, the seven remaining players pushed through player fatigue to keep the scored tied. But late in the game, Charlotte blasted through a tackle for a score, giving Charlotte the win, 12 to 5.

Match two kicked off a hard-hitting, face-paced game against the Charleston Outlaws. With its stellar defense, The Misfits were holding their own, 5-0, until tough break number two happened. Wade Deliberto of HQBN.

MarDiv twisted his ankle and was unable to play for the rest of the tournament, leaving the Misfits another man down against Charleston and without their fastest player. The fter watching the Misfits Outlaws grabbed the advantage and corporal scored six trys converting on 3 of the point after attempts With the score 36-0 John Moder, of Craft Small Company, managed a run over the top of one would be tackler, while dragging another, to give a short pass to teammate Matthew Perry. Perry, of Combat Engineer Battalion, outran the rest of the Charleston players to score and saved the Misfits from a shut out, 36 to 5.

Just call her 'Miss 300.'

Denise Emeott, a staff sergeant with 2d Force Service Support Grou dubbed the nickname by her boyfriend, Ron Weatherbee, after she bowled fect 300 game, July 16 during her regular Monday night league play at Bor Bowling Center aboard Camp Lejeune.

As a member of the Jacksonville/Lejeune chapter of the Women's Interr Bowling Congress (WIBC), Emeott became the second member ever to a such a score in the chapter's history. The last time was more than 32 yea when Vicki Hill bowled a perfect 300 in 1969. Emeott has been bowling si was 9-years-old and recently represented the Marine Corps at the Armed Bowling Championships. But believe it or not, that Monday night, she wasn't even trying.

"I hadn't bowled in about six weeks. I love the sport, but sometimes ye lull. So, I took a break (from bowling) and started taking up golf," said Em missed bowling and came back that Monday night and was joking around my team that 'I am bowling a 300 tonight, and I'm not talking a series."

But no one from her team, The 2M2W's (Two Men Two Women), was laughing as Emeott hit the last two frames out of 12, on her first game

"When I got into the tenth frame, significant it was." everybody stopped to watch me bowl. I didn't see anyone around me, I was in my own zone, my own world, and blocked everyone out," reflects Emeott. "It didn't hit me until the eleventh ball that I knew I was going for 300, and then my hands

Twenty-six strategists met for the Base Chess Championships held at Camp Lejeune to endure the rigors of mental competition. Five rounds of Swissstyle match play pitted Marines and Sailors from Lejeune and the surrounding bases against opponents of similar strength in five 30-minute timed games

James Adkins, MCAS Cherry Point, and Santy Wong, separated the field in undefeated competition by round five. The two faced each other in the final game and both drew their match giving each an addi-tional half point (for 4.5 each). Adkins won first place through the pre-announced tie breaking method of adding up the end scores of the previous opponents played, making Wong the second place winner

Makin AbdulHamid, similarly beat out four other players with four points, each through the same tie breaking system, achieving third place, Elevenyear-old Zachary Plum won Junior Champion at the event.

"This was an excellent showing and an outstand-ing tournament" said Adkins of the cross-section of retirees, dependents, DoD civilians, enlisted, NCO's, SNCO's and officers who were involved in the com-petition. Adkins and Wong will have a chance to set-tle things once and for all in a few weeks as they face off on opposing teams at the Interservice Chess tournament taking place Friday through Aug. 24 in Fort Myer, Va. Also attending will be the base tournament's director, Steven Rollins who captained last year's team to a 2nd place finish. "Look for Intramural Chess in the fall," said

Rollins, who is also the club's president.

Tough breaks and injured players painted a bleak situation as the Misfits faced their third match against the Raliegh Vipers.

But, the team got by with a little help from their friends - namely Edwin Forrest. Forrest - a former USMC corporal, who now attends Western Carolina University - used to play with the Misfits, what's going to happen." USA Today says the "backs, humble men in their mid- to late-20s seem cut from the same mold: Each already has beaten the odds as midto low-round draft picks. All possess similar, downhill running styles with seeming-ly tireless legs - perfect to showcase in Shanahan's vaunted offens

Anderson (being paid $298,000) "has been hitting the hole faster than the others," USA Today said. "Part of that is because the 230-pounder shed 10-12 pounds during the off-season. He has looked far more comfortable in just his second year as a pro. This is a former sixth-round pick who played in the high school band rather than on the football team

The names of Anderson and Gary no doubt have come up also behind the scenes as the Ravens look for a replacement for star back Jamal Lewis, out for the year with an injury. It probably would require a 2002 first-round draft pick to acquire either one.

Baltimore signed Terry Allen to a oneyear contract Saturday for the veteran minimum salary but said they still have not ruled out a trade including Marine veteran Jim Mora, USA Today reported.

Mora's Colts defeated the Seahawks, 28-21, in an exhibition. To the underdog's coach, Friday night's arenafootball2 title game wasn't David vs. Goliath.

"It's more like David vs. Goliath's big brother, who just got home after four years in the Marines," Richard Davis told the Richmond (Va.) Times-Dispatch.

His Richmond Speed (15-3) faced defending champion Quad City (17-1), which has put together as close to a dynasty as is possible in a 2-year-old league. In 37 games, Quad City had been beaten once. The Steamwheelers led the league this season in scoring, total offense, scoring defense, turnover margin and field-goal accuracy. Yes, Quad-City won the title, 55-51.

The name of Marine vet Les Steckel may be one of the many being considered by the Patriots to succeed assistant coach Dick Rehbein, who died last week.

Steckel was offensive coordinator of the Titans, who barely lost to the Rams in the 2000 Super Bowl, and for the Titans, who came the closest of any team to the Ravens in the 2001 playoffs. He also was

HORSE RACIN

Marine beat Romanceishinneck Saturday in the $150,000 and had come to the tournament only as a spectator.

After watching the Misfits lose two keys players, he suited up and hit the field to give the Misfits the seventh man they desperately needed. Forrest's skills and energy rejuvenated the team and the Misfits cranked up the buzz saw against the Vipers.

With two tries from McCue, three from Forrest, and two converted points after by Mulvihill the Misfits grabbed their first win and shut out Raleigh, 29-0.

With a record of 1-2 in the first rounds, the Misfits were placed in the third tier for the second round of play against the Tar Devils.

The Tar Devils – a team comprised of players from UNC and Duke – had met the Misfits three weeks earlier at Cape Fear and were soundly defeated 56 to 0.

Upon learning its first match was against the Misfits, The Tar Devils bailed, giving the Misfits a forfeit win and a pass to the championship game.

The Misfits faced their toughest competition in the championship match against the more experienced, Camp Carolina.

A team of UNC students, who are also from other countries, Camp Carolina made their skills from the start.

They scored quickly in the opening minutes of the match, grabbed four more points, and converted all points after attempts.

As the Misfits continued to play tough rugby, a late penalty against camp Carolina offered a chance to score. Brian Mulvihill of SOTG took advantage of the penalty quickly putting the ball into play before Camp Carolina was set, and passed to Mike Aldridge of 2d Recon Bn who then passed quickly to Sean Vieira of 5/10

Vieira dove into try from three meters out, saving the Misfits from a shutout, 35-5 and earning them a second place tournament win

Special thanks to Burnie Matthews for his contributions to article. The Misfits practice each Tuesday and Thursday at W.P.T. Hill Field. They are currently gearing up for regular season play beginning in September and are seeking new members. For more information, call 451-7495.

PRO FOOTBALL

At his induction into the Pro Football Hall of Fame, Coach Marv Levy paid tribute to his mother and father, whom the Chicago Tribune noted, "didn't live to enjoy his success in Buffalo (with the Bills) but paved the way for it." "His mother read Shakespeare on her own and imparted a love of reading, reporter Don Pierson wrote. "His dad was a good athlete at Medill High in Chicago and took his sons to Cubs games and talked about the Bears when they were the Monsters of the Midway."

His father Sam, a wholesale grocer in Chicago, was a WW I Marine who was gassed and wounded at Bealleau Wood. He was Marv's hero and a lifelong influence, Pierson wrote. He once observed his son daydreaming while leaning on a broom and told him, "Go play football."

Levy did at Coe College (Iowa), holds a master's degree in English history from Harvard, even coached 11 seasons at New Mexico, California and William & Mary and brought the Bills to four Super Bowls

He joined the Army Air Corps during WW II, failed an eye test to be a pilot but became a meteorologist. The Chargers, whose new general man ager is Marine vet John Butler, defeated the 49ers, 25-24, in an exhibition. Fox Sports Radio's "Tony Bruno signed up seven NFL coaches, an assistant coach on the Patriots' 1986 Super Bowl team.

BASEBALL

The day after inducting four new members, the Baseball Hall of Fame announced a major change in the way some players and all non-playing personnel will be selected for admission.

Its board of directors disbanded the veterans committee that had the power to induct players bypassed in the annual balloting of the Baseball Writers Association of America, the Baltimore Sun reported. The old veterans committee - also was charged with choosing managers, umpires, Negro leagues players and executives will be replaced with a new committee composed of Hall of Fame players (61 are living), three members of the old committee and media members who have been inducted into the writing and broadcasting wings at Cooperstown (26). The previous committee consisted of 15 former players, executives and media members.

The change puts the power to elect new members squarely in the hands of former players, who would make up more than two-thirds of what would be a 90-member committee if it convened today. The committee will vote on bypassed players every other year, starting in 2003, and will hold an election for non-playing personnel every four years. BBWAA voting for the
