BEAUFORT, S.C. — A pair of maintenance technicians teamed up on a jet, one climbing atop the bird to inspect an engine compartment. The other crawled below, opened a panel and began testing the complex wiring serving the Hornet's left engine.

They were searching for the cause of a glitch the pilot noticed during engine power-up, which caused the engine to keep revving instead of leveling off after ignition.

The pilot had to cancel his flight until technicians could resolve the problem.

Squadron ground crews are the unsung heroes in a complex network of personnel responsible for making America's war birds ready to fly.

VMFA-312 ground personnel are waiting for their turn to deploy in support of Operation Enduring Freedom, America and her allies' response to the Sept. 11 terrorist attacks.

Test fire deemed success

USS Yorktown fires guns from 10 miles out

Mike Sherrill
GLOBE Contributor

A dust cloud sprang up about 200 meters from an old tractor in the middle of an empty field, and a few seconds later a sharp crack rang out.

For the first time in more than 20 years, a naval warship Oct. 19 fired shells onto Camp Lejeune. Officials declared the day a success.

And civilian officials agreed. Most said they saw nothing in the hour-long test to immediately raise red flags that the training would disturb area residents.

Camp Lejeune officials, touting the value of the training as well as putting some distance between it and the debate over whether Camp Lejeune could possibly be used as a replacement for a military bombing range in Vieques, Puerto Rico, invited local and state representatives to witness the offshore shelling and onshore sighting exercise.

More than 50 military personnel and local officials perched in the second level of a three-story observation tower a mile from two targets. Above them, Marines radioed coordinates that came across in scratchy ones, zeros and nines to the guided missile cruiser USS Yorktown about six miles offshore.

They gave word that a round was in the air.

"Shot."

Eyes stared ahead. Some peered through binoculars, fixing the lens crosshairs on the targets in front of them. Others huddled in camouflage parkas to stave off the wind. Then came the command that the bomb was one second from impact.

"What sound would you like to hear, the sound of more artillery or the sound of a 110-story building crashing to the ground?"

Joe McLaughlin
Commissioner
Onslow County

"Flash."

It was that simple, civilian representatives noted.

"I haven't seen anything here to really alarm me," said Onslow County Board of Commissioners Chairman Delma Collins, who added he is waiting to see the Marines' next impact study.

To all heroes, thank you

Let the sounds of freedom ring

To the editor:

This is a letter to America's heroes. I was born in Jacksonville and have lived here for most of my life, so I know well the difference between a Marine and a local. One need not look far to see Marines; they smoke outside pool halls and tattoo parlors, take Western Boulevard like a lap at The Rock, loiter in our mall and date our daughters. They are usually met with furrowed brows, wrinkled foreheads, and deep frowns. This is the way it has always been between Marines and locals.

Then terrorists attacked our nation. Suddenly Marines' shortcomings seemed trivial. The young hotshot who grated my nerves with his supersonic music from the turning lane on Friday was the same kid who was prepared to die for my freedom on Wednesday.

What can I possibly say to explain my feelings for you Marines and your families who are strangers to me, and yet dear friends, somehow?

I cannot imagine what it was like to be a passenger on one of the hijacked planes, frantically dialing a cell phone, knowing that, in minutes, you will lose everyone that matters in your life. And they will lose you. And there's nothing you can do to stop it.

On Tuesday, Sept. 11, I drove home from work not looking skyward, for fear that the horrors of the day would fall on my precious life. In little or no time, again driving home from work, I heard the familiar buzz of a routine helicopter flight; a previously irritating sound is now music to my ears.

Sometime after viewing a news clip about a pregnant woman who lost her husband in this tragedy, I was shopping and came upon a special Christmas ornament. It read, "A baby is God's way of saying the world should go on." Tears flooded my eyes at the realization of how much He loves this world. He has sent a host of angels in black boots to guard this town, to save humanity. As a mother of a 13-month-old little boy who was safe at home with his grandma during the attacks, I realize my good fortune. He is everything to me.

People like you give the rest of us hope. Hope that there is still good in this world. Hope that America will still be a safe place for my son. Hope that proves our people will not be beaten. As you step an exhausted foot into the leg of your cammies at four o'clock tomorrow morning, not knowing whether you'll be in America or Afghanistan by sunset, remember that you are the only reason I can sleep at night. If something so horrible ever happens to my family or me, we'll have a chance of surviving because of you.

So tonight, when I peek over the crib at a little sleeping cherub, I will have hope. And as I place a blanket over his curled body, I will hear his breath and know what it means to be alive.

Thank you. Words are not enough. The preceding letter was submitted to Jacksonville's Daily News 'Letters to the Editor' column on Oct. 19. Yarbrough is from Jacksonville. Reprinted with permission.

America needs Osprey

Corps' top general disappointed, sets record straight

I am very concerned and disappointed in your editorial ("Osprey isn't ready to help in war effort," Oct. 10), which implies that I am using the war on terrorism to justify rushing the V-22 Osprey program into production at an accelerated rate. Nothing could be further from the truth.

The loss of 23 Marines in two Osprey tragic accidents last year painfully illustrates the difficulty and risk inherent in harnessing the capability of new technology, even where the technology is itself mature. Aviation programs, even today, are never risk-free.

In the wake of those accidents, the secretary of defense, at my request, convened a panel of experts to conduct a comprehensive review of the program. They concluded that the technology was sound and recommended that the program be funded at a rate sufficient to sustain the industrial base until the engineering deficiencies and panel recommendations could be implemented.

That is the message I have consistently shared with lawmakers since the panel completed its review last spring, and that was the purpose of my recent visit to Camp Lejeune.

Our nation's requirement for a tilt-rotor aircraft is the result of lessons learned from the failed AV-19B Desert One, in which eight Americans died during a mission to rescue hostages being held by Iranian militants. The limited speed of helicopters contributed directly to the failure of that mission.

Twenty years later, we lack an aircraft with the speed necessary to respond and effectively in many vast and unforgiving environments around the world. Regardless of our needs, Osprey, returning to operation, will be a deliberate and methodical process.

Occur only after the resumption and completion of extensive testing and evaluation. To suggest otherwise in an editorial does, in my opinion, is incorrect and offensive in its implications.

The above letter was sent to the Altus Air Statesman, a Texas publication, and ran in the Oct. 10 edition. Gen. Jones is Commandant of the Marine Corps. Reprinted with permission.

"... for the strength of the Pack is the Wolf, and the strength of the Wolf is the Pack."

-- Rudyard Kipling, as cited in the 32nd Commandant's Guidance

Known first among sergeants

First, let me say that the first time you find yourself standing first in line in front of the first sergeant's desk, you'll be the first one to realize why he's called first among sergeants.

The crusty old composite of stern features, stripes, ribbons and diamonds will probably tell you he's got more salt in his socks than you've got in your seabag and you'd better shape up or he'll ship you out. First sergeants have been doing that for a long time. Since shortly after the war of 1812, in fact.

During that early combat period the Corps had exactly 115 men serving as sergeants, some working with units and others wrestling with garrison life. When the war ended and the Navy took over the primary job of nation defense and showing the flag around the navigable world, most ships with Marines aboard had no officer and the Leathernecks were commanded by a sergeant.

Under that system you had sergeants facing pirates and privateers at sea drawing the same salary as sergeants dealing with laundry hangups at the Washington Barracks. Since there was no special "combat pay" to reward the three-striper getting shot at, Congress in 1833 finally realized the situation was unfair and created the intermediate rank of "orderly sergeants of the post" and "first sergeant of the guards at sea."

They were not common ranks (in fact there were only 33 men originally appointed to the two titles) but they did not have some monetary benefits. The 33 Marines who first received the ranks in 1833 drew $16 per month.

Just a year later, a billet arrangement at Headquarters Marine Corps in Washington set the stage for usage of first sergeants as specialists in administration. Three orderly sergeants were employed in 1834 by the Colonel Commandant, the Adjutant and Inspector and the Quartermaster.

While the act establishing orderly and first sergeants officially referred to them by those names. By far the most common term used for senior NCO's was orderly sergeant. Over the years, however, Marines who found it difficult to deal with three syllable words in fast-paced barracks-room bitching sessions began to refer to the senior NCO at their station as simply the "first sergeant."

By July 1872 the term orderly sergeant was almost unheard throughout the Corps and Headquarters decided to link reality with the official record by dropping the title in favor of first sergeant.

First sergeants remained in the second pay grade until 1893, when they received a three-dollar monthly raise in salary. This threw some smelly substance into the rank-rate game, since the sergeant major and quartermaster sergeant remained senior enlisted men but drew only $23 per month, or $2 dollars less than the first sergeant and drum major.

What followed was a hazy period of NCO command relationships and pay inequities kept everybody grumbling over their heads. Finally in 1899, following the war in Spain, a law was enacted which finally ended the mess. Legislators set forth a new grade, the number of men who could occupy the post, and pay grade along with the first sergeants created just a year earlier.

By the beginning of World War I, first sergeants were firmly entrenched and adored the senior NCO in many commands. At war, however, first sergeants again found themselves on the short end of the stick.

Sergeants major and quartermaster sergeants were the Corps' senior ranks, but both special technical ability and many first sergeants with tears of frustration as junior sergeants jumped over them for promotion to the senior NCO ranks.

Then in 1958, the Career Compensation Act was amended and two new pay grades were added to the top of the enlisted structure. The first sergeants found themselves upped a grade to E-8, but still second in the over-all picture to the sergeant major and Master gunnery sergeant.

Finally, let me say, while the first sergeant is officially not first, it would not be wise to consider him second in your command. He is first for a second.

CAPT. DALE

America's first hero died

I was sitting in my room reading the Stars and Stripes today. I opened the paper to Page 2 and suddenly saw the face of an Air Force master sergeant who was killed in the Arabian Peninsula in an accident while conducting heavy equipment work.

He was the first in the campaign against terrorism to die.

I stared at his face for what seemed like eternity and a swell of emotion rose over me like a tidal wave. I read that this man was a born-again Christian and was on all accounts a good man.

I read on to see that he was married and away obviously on deployment when this took place. I touched at this point saw names and numbers about a paragraph away. I knew in my heart they were his children. I slowed in my reading as if not wanting to confirm the tragic truth. I then reached the names

Ethan, 9, Leah, 6, Courtney, 4, and Mackensie, 2. I felt as if my heart was being crushed in a vice. I looked again and again at his face, a face no different than many others and mine. The man was someone who was performing a simple yet so heroic in many ways. I saw a man who was not willing to be away from his family, even that is the last place I am sure he wanted to be. I saw a man who was married in 1972. I saw a man who was most of all; clearly doing his duty and most of all; clearly leaving fragments of his life left behind because of time to march off into the sunset. And in a moment in pause, wondered about fairness.

We as a country have lost so many and recently. Our hearts are raw and exposed, feeling every sensation of hurt and loss.

YUMA, Ariz. — Marines of Marine Air Control Squadron-1 gathered inside the gun loop at the MACS-1 compound Friday to cheer on the Marine they voted to be thrown out of an airplane as he free-fell from 10,000 feet.

Staff Sgt. Steve Harrison, MACS-1 communications maintenance, found out Oct. 3 — after returning from temporary additional duty — the majority of MACS-1 Marines voted him to be the one to go on a tandem skydive with Chuck Sims of Arizona Air Play Skydiving out of Summerton, Ariz.

According to Gunnery Sgt. Ronald Wooldridge, organizer of the event, the dive was, in part, to raise money to off-set the cost of the Marine Corps Ball for junior Marines, but also to boost camaraderie and esprit de corps within the unit.

"It's all about getting the squadron together," Wooldridge stated.

The drive for the dive started Aug. 1 when all nine sections of MACS-1 nominated a Marine in their section to be in the running for the dive. Ten Marines total were nominated, and all accepted the nomination.

Wooldridge explained that ten covered jars with each Marine's name were placed around the compound, and the jar that raised the most money for the ball was essentially the Marine who got the most votes to be thrown out of the plane. Harrison was that Marine.

"The hardest part was getting through the door," said an exhilarated Harrison, with a "perma-smile" stretched from ear to ear upon his landing. "Once I was pushed out ... that was great."

Harrison said he was surprised to hear of his nomination. He was even more surprised to find out he would be jumping in less than five days.

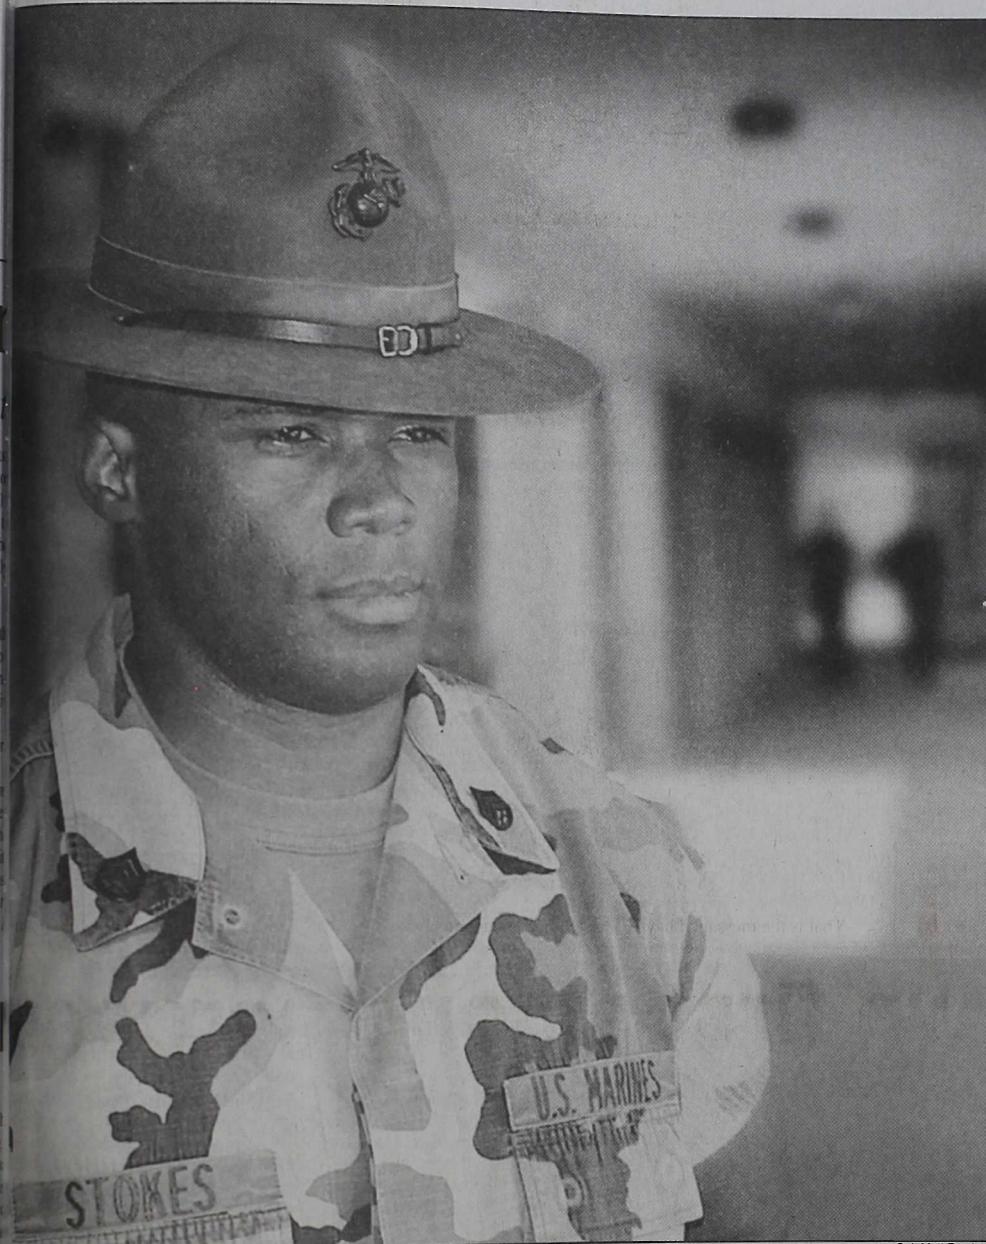

"I was excited, then I was a little nervous ... I'm excited my Marines felt that much about me to nominate me," said Harrison.

But, Lt. Col. Mark Blaydes, commanding officer of MACS-1, has his own speculations on why Harrison received the most votes.

"Nearly 40 Marines informed me they saw him shaking on the rappel tower and that's why they nominated him," said Blaydes, who also said he couldn't be more pleased with the participation he saw from his unit.

"There was a lot across the board. Some participated with just pennies and others with dollars, but by and large we saw a lot of participation," Blaydes said. "I think the Marines will talk about this, and next time we'll see a lot more participation."

Blaydes and Wooldridge commented on how they have seen

RODEN CITY, N.Y. — When terrorists bombed planes and intentionally crashed the World Trade Center's Twin Towers on Sept. 11, hundreds of rescue workers rushed to the scene. The first crew of New York City firefighters to enter Tower 1 was Ladder Company 10. Leading their way up the "B" stairwell. The firefighters, according to FDNY Capt. To the shock of his brother firefighters and the Marines of 2nd Battalion, Marines, Tallon was among the hundreds who have yet to be located and are presumed dead.

4th Marines take urban combat into Warfighting Lab

Sgt. Stephen L. Standifird
Marine Combat Correspondent

OKINAWA, Japan — Marines from Lima Company, 3rd Battalion, 4th Marine Regiment, assigned to 3rd Marine Division as part of the Unit Deployment Program, assaulted an opposing force as part of a three-week experiment with the Marine Corps Warfighting Laboratory.

The concept being evaluated is the Information Warrior, a rifleman with an AN/PRC-148 radio for communication with the platoon commander, platoon sergeant and each squad leader. The goals are to determine both the value of adding an information warrior as well as the utility of adding the radio to the current equipment list for the infantry.

The lab is experimenting with putting more radios at the lower echelon of the platoon to better communicate, according to Randy Gangle from the Marine Corps Warfighting Lab.

"This experiment will seek to improve overall decision making, maneuver and combat effectiveness through improved situational awareness," Gangle added. "The Warfighting Lab will seek to determine if the inclusion of personnel dedicated to observing, recording and the passing and receiving of information at the squad and platoon level will enhance decision making and operational effectiveness in the infantry platoon."

The experiment basically takes a rifleman, gives him the radio and adds to his main mission. He still carries a rifle, Gangle continued. But he just has a little more to do.

"Small unit leaders at the company level and below have three primary functions: self-protection, decision making for the employment of their unit and communicating with lower, higher and adjacent units," added Gangle, a retired Marine colonel. "With all these competing demands, it is the third element, communication, that is often most neglected. This in turn leads to a reduction in overall situational awareness throughout the unit at all levels."

Cpl. Oscar Rauda, a squad leader, with Lima

Co., 3d Bn., 4th Marines, felt the information warrior would help the squad leaders move their team more accurately.

"As a squad leader you're mostly in the fight and maneuvering your team leaders, which means the more information that's given to you, the better aware of the situation you are, and what's going on at all times," said the Camp Schwab Marine. "I think with the equipment we have right now, all the information coming from higher up makes you a better leader. It gives you better control of the mission."

Throughout the experiment, surveys and observations were gathered from the squads and data was collected to make the final decision.

The last day of the experiment, the assault on the opposing forces, brought everything together while the Warfighting Lab observed.

"Personally, I liked the program that we did," said Cpl. Bobby Cosper, squad leader, L Co., 3rd Bn., 4th Marines. "I think the stuff we used out here is going to improve the infantry a lot in the future."

Okinawa was chosen for this experiment because of the terrain found on the island. It has semi-open, urban and jungle terrain. Okinawa is the only site in the Department of Defense with jungle terrain available for training and experimentation.

The Information Warrior experiment tested how the use of a squad radios connecting squad leaders to the platoon sergeant and platoon commander, could result in better communication in an urban environment.

During the experiment, Information Warrior Marines assisted the Marine Corps Warfighting Lab with evaluations and surveys on what did and did not work.

Standifird is a combat correspondent out of Camp Butler, Okinawa, Japan.

Sgt. Stephen L. Standifird

Recently, the Jacksonville Young Marines of 1st Battalion, 1st Marines of North Carolina graduated from their 13-week boot camp. Family and friends watch their young warriors accept the title of Young Marines from the unit's building at Camp Johnson. "Their attitudes have changed," retired Capt. Ron said of his three new Young Marine grandchildren. "They work together more. Before they used to bicker, but learned more respect for one another. They help mom and their attitudes in school are good."

He smiled as he watched his twin grandsons, Jonathon Tatum and his granddaughter, Ashley Tatum, walk parade deck.

About 30 Young Marines enrolled in the Jacksonville program from ages eight to 18. The unit has four volunteer instructors and a commanding officer. Cpl. Richard Porter, instructor said he volunteered because he had enrolled in the program.

Children learn responsibility for their actions and respect. "A myriad of things including core values," said the instructor, Colo. native. "It's a stepping stone for the future." Other drill instructors include Lance Cpls. Corey Beavers and Cpl. Joseph Duncan.

He emphasized the Young Marines' motto, "Youth is our future." That statement was something the commanding officer, Cpl. David Appleton, stressed in his speech during the ceremony. He also expressed his thanks to the Marine Corps support to the organization.

"The Marine Corps support we are able to do this," said the instructor, N.J. native. "They allow us to use this building at no cost. We are very lucky to be on base." Marines share a building aboard Camp Johnson on separate evenings to conduct their training.

Other guest speakers included Marine Corps Combat Service Support Schools commanding officer, Col. Jonathan Pasco and Sergeant Major Sgt. Maj. Robert Colon. Pasco addressed the Young Marines in formation, telling them that they had demonstrated courage.

"Your courage is that you have decided to stick with the program even when it got tough. You knew it was the right thing to do," said Pasco, who is originally from Valrico, Fla. "This program makes better citizens by instilling core values. You also learn moral and physical fitness. You all should take pride in your accomplishment. You have the right to be proud."

Colon, a Brooklyn, N.Y., native, told the parents that they had done the right thing by investing their time in such a worthwhile program.

"I think they learn discipline," explained Anissa Jones, said of the program's overall benefit. She also noticed a change in her niece, also a graduate of the program. "I think she's learned more self-control." Jones said she hopes to enroll her son in the program in the spring.

"I work harder in school now," said Sasha Huff, a Young Marine graduate and a student at Southwest Middle School. "Before I never put my mind into it. The Young Marines push you so you learn, and now I do it at school too."

After the graduation, the Young Marines and their families moved across the road to feast on pizza, sandwiches and other goodies. They received T-shirts and certificates showing their accomplishment of becoming a Young Marine.

According to the Young Marines Web site, Marine Corps League members formed the Young Marines of Waterbury, Conn., in 1958. It attracted considerable attention and by 1962, Connecticut had a youth program involving over 1,500 boys in 10 cities and towns. During a Marine Corps League convention, the Young Marines was adopted as a national program, and the official charter was issued on Oct. 17, 1965 and thereafter the program spread throughout the country. The organization became international in 1995, forming Young Marine units in Okinawa, Japan.

The Jacksonville Young Marines meet every Tuesday evening. For information about joining, call 577-1545 or see the Young Marines Web site at www.youngmarines.org.

Translators provide comm skills

JUNSTON HALL — The primary mission of the Marine Forces Unitas is to improve relations with our South American and counterparts.

One may think, it is probably a difficult situation when militaries don't have anyone available who speaks the host nation's language. That's why there are translators.

Approximately 90 percent of the people in the militaries with don't speak English, on-the-other-hand, 90 percent of our service members don't speak the host nation's language. "We use that other ten percent as translators," said intelligence officer Capt. Javier A. Torres.

Without them, we wouldn't be able to do what we need to do. "We change ideas at the small unit level and practice inter-unit cooperation, which are also two of the primary missions of the unit," he said.

He also stated the translators sometimes have to translate special events and also to give military classes. "There are always requests from the host nations to give us classes on our training," said Torres.

They enjoy learning things like non-lethal weapons training, non-combatant Evacuation Operation procedures and other things. "The translators are the ones who give them those classes," he said. "The Marines say that the job of translating goes way beyond just giving classes or sitting down with a group and help to each other."

At least once a week we are translating verbally or in writing. Cpl. Kenette Mora, a Unitas administration clerk, said most of our translations during exercises or ship visits are over operation orders, community relations projects, and military members that come aboard and other things that might pop up.

He also try to help the individual Marine or Sailor who just have a conversation with someone they can't really understand or understand.

Just to one translator, translating can sometimes be a lot more than expected.

At the point, every now and then, when I can't translate a word or phrase properly during a conversation," said transport operator Lance Cpl. Carlos Espinosa. "At times to convert Spanish or Portuguese into English, I'll just take it slower until I figure out what to say. I need to say it."

Although translating can be difficult, there is also a benefit for the Marines that translate while on Unitas. "The Marines can earn some extra money translating," said Cpl. Mora. "They can earn up to $125 a month for using the skills they have."

berth on the Marine Corps Rifle and Pistol team, according to the Sand Point, Idaho Marine.

The intramural competition stimulates interest in and the development of marksmanship coaching techniques as well as providing an opportunity for annual requalification with the service rifle and pistol.

"In addition to the competition, the participants receive their (marksmanship) coaches certificate," said Conrad, who has shot competitively since 1985. "They return to their units as a better-trained Marine capable of marksmanship instruction."

To enter the event, units advance a four-person team, two of whom must be enlisted. One must be an officer, one must be a sergeant or below and one must be a "Tyro" (a Marine that has not previously competed in an intramural or division match).

The intramurals have three phases. Phase one includes all classroom instruction for the Marksmanship Coaches Course.

During Phase Two, shooters fire the Known Distance (KD) Requalification Courses for both the rifle and pistol.

In Phase Three, they shoot the same course of fire that is used during the Division and Marine Corps Matches.

During the Division Matches, shooters fire more rounds per yard line and are given more latitude as to how they hold the weapon while firing.

For example, the sling is not utilized in the standing position, according to Sgt. James L. Adams of Maysville, Mo., a WT marksmanship instructor.

Conrad predicts that the present KD course will be modified toward a more "combat ready" course of fire.

Lance Cpl. Jared C. Fox, currently assigned to Headquarters and Service Bn., 2d Force Service Support Group here agrees with Conrad.

"The KD course is designed for competition shooting. It doesn't provide a realistic firing situation," said the Big Lake Township, Wis. native. "Moving and pop-up targets should be used. Our enemies aren't going to stand on a berm waiting for us to hit them."

Conrad preaches weapons safety and positive attitudes for shooters on the ranges.

"Weapons safety begins with proper weapons handling," she said. "Shooting is all about attitude. That rifle or pistol doesn't care about the weather conditions."

An awards ceremony is scheduled for Friday at 7:30 a.m. inside the Stone Bay Gym. Units are encouraged to attend to support their respective team.

AITC from 1B

Division. At any time we could go back there, so we are basically training who may be on our left or right a year from now. We never turn down students. If they come here we'll train them," said Capt. Aaron Cunningham of Atlanta, AITC company commander.

After attending the Infantry Training Battalion, Marines report to their units where they train. When their command decides they are ready to advance and take over a leadership billet within their unit, they are sent to AITC.

The Infantry Platoon Sergeants Course is 39 training days. The primary goal is to get platoon sergeants to the level of a lieutenant, platoon commander. The instructors emphasize thinking and decision-making skills, patrolling, weapons, orders and defense. The focus is on company and battalion level exercises. The course spends more time in the classroom than in the field, stressing more of a thinking process and getting the Marines to make tactical decisions. The combat decision range is used as an individual training tool. It allows the Marines to be put in a situation where they make decisions and get instant feedback.

The squad leader course runs for seven weeks, focusing on rifle platoon-level operations. Generally, corporals and occasionally sergeants attend this course, studying mortars, machineguns and any weapon organic to a rifle company. The students get well-rounded exposure to all weapons, focusing on patrolling, orders and decision-making processes.

One of the more intense courses is the Advanced Mortar Leader course. With only six weeks of training, the students cram all they can about the ins and outs of the mortar, which is a technical weapon.

"You can never know enough about the mortar," said Cunningham. The students cover everything about (M224) 60 and (M252) 81mm mortars. They have two live-fire shoots, where they tie in everything they've learned in class and practical application. This is probably the only place Marines will get that, including Advanced Fire Direction Center (FTC), Forward Observation (FO), the mechanics of the gun itself on the gun-line and advanced mortar gunnery."

The Advanced Machinegun Leader course is three weeks. The course is designed for rifle or weapons company Marines.

"The Marines study the 240-Golf, MK19 and 50 Caliber Machine guns," explained Cunningham. They cover weapons employment and offensive and defensive tactics."

What used to be known as the Close Combat Instructor course is now the Martial Arts Instructor course per the commandant's guidance. The three-week class is open to all Military Occupational Specialties (MOS) to include females. The course was increased from two weeks recently and was originally taught at Quantico, Va.

According to Cunningham, the students usually have no qualifications, but can test up to a green belt instructor trainer. The Marines can then go back to their unit and qualify Marines for tan belt.

"The hope is to eventually, have enough green belts within 2d Marine Division to up the ante here (AITC) and then maybe train black belts. By then, the battalions will have their own systems in place and we'll see where it goes from there," Cunningham continued.

Aside from the five main active-duty courses, AITC offers two-week reserve classes of the Platoon Sergeants and Squad Leader courses once a year.

Last year, Marine Combat Training Battalion ceased teaching live-fire machine gun weapons. AITC offers three-day basic machine gun courses, so any MOS needing machine guns can get a crash course.

"For example, the wing often needs 240-Golf door gunners, so they can come just for three days and get what they need," said Cunningham. "We've had a good response. The class is open to all MOSs including women."

There is a total of 12 classes per year that include three total classes, one for the MK19, 240 Golf and 50 Cal.

"Every Marine who comes to us has a different level of experience and expertise, but when they leave here, every Marine is better suited to go back to their unit to lead and train Marines," said Cunningham.

For units who cannot afford the time to send Marines for an extended period of time to AITC, or just need a little coaching, AITC offers mobile training teams.

"We are the subject matter experts, so we will go to a unit's range and coach them on the weapon," added Cunningham.

AITC continues to seek Marines to train and send them back to division as finely tuned leaders with these newly acquired assets.

subjects, such as wearing seatbelts, avoiding fatigue, alcohol, speeding and other elements that may effect their safety.

Their presentation displayed 100 photos of traffic accidents. Representatives of Marine Corps Community came to talk to Marines about domestic violence and other issues at home.

Camp Lejeune Fire Fighters presented about fire safety, displaying some equipment and vehicles. And, they listened to Naval Hospital Promotions professionals who discussed issues such as smoking cessation and prostate cancer, proper diet and health concerns.

"I think it was informative and a unique experience," said Seattle Lance Cpl. Jason S. Elliot, a transport mechanic student.

"As safe as Marines already are, we can never be safe enough."

enclosed in 60 tons of lethal steel.

Learning to fight in the M48A3 tank became easier for him after a hands-on indoctrination with the war machine. As technology advanced throughout his career, Speranzi saw four generations of tanks come and go.

"When I joined Delta Company, 2d Tank Battalion, they were the last company still retiring the M103 tank, but utilizing the M48A3 which the battalion had for some time. It was a fairly easy piece of machinery to learn, just about everything on it was manually operated. Before long, everybody knew everybody else's job so if something did happen to one of us, another crewmember could take up the slack," recalled Speranzi.

After being promoted to Sergeant in August 1974 Speranzi was selected as one of the first Marines to test and evaluate the new M60A1/M60E3 tank for introduction in the Corps.

"When we finally got the M1A1 (Abrams Main Battle Tank), it was like going from a Volkswagen to a Cadillac," Speranzi said. "The tank is awesome and very lethal."

However, he did point out a flaw of the "Iron Horse."

"Tanks and apricots don't mix. Call it superstition or whatever, but any time someone eats apricots on a tank, something breaks or it throws track," he explained. "Those that don't believe can walk. I've thrown my own crewmen off my tank for eating apricots."

After six months of successful testing Speranzi returned to Lejeune to take on a new role as the new equipment-training instructor. His mission was to conduct transition training for Marines who would be working on the new tanks rolling into the battalion.

Before reporting to the drill field in 1975, Speranzi served as a member of the Marine Barracks/Ground Defense Force, Guantanamo Bay, Cuba for a year.

He had heard "horror stories" concerning the Parris Island S.C., Drill Instructor School and was admittedly, "a bit leery of being a drill instructor."

"I heard about the enormous amount of physical training and how hard the instructors are on the DI candidates," said Speranzi.

After listening to the advice of several staff noncommissioned officers in his battalion, Speranzi soon overcame his fears to find himself right back on the yellow footprints wearing "a new hat."

"I was told that if I was going to continue to venture out and test myself, the drill field was the place to do it."

During his tour on the island, Speranzi was promoted to staff sergeant, and left as a meritoriously promoted gunnery sergeant.

"It was one of my better tours. My time on the 'grinder' opened my eyes to a whole new idealism of the Marine Corps and completely changed my attitude to where I was going and where I've come from," said Speranzi. "It was a rewarding experience. It really honed my time management skills and let me exercise sound judgment. I walked away with an appreciation for the DI's and the entire (recruit training) process. I worked with some of the most professional Marines in my career down there on the depot."

Speranzi said he left the parade deck with a wealth of knowledge and a newfound respect for the Corps, but found himself moving further from his love of tanks.

His next assignment landed him at Cornell University in Ithaca, N.Y., where he served as the Assistant Marine Officer Instructor of the Navy Reserve Officer Training Corps there. He was tasked with the instruction of midshipman in areas of drill, physical fitness, customs and military uniform regulations and history.

Having held several billets as an instructor, Speranzi wanted to return to his roots.

"It's all good training, but there's nothing like shootin', movin' and communication," he said.

Speranzi reported to 1st Tank Bn. in Camp Pendleton in September and rediscovered the finer points of tanks and leading the Marines that run them.

Speranzi, having served with every Marine Division and tank battalion in the Marine Corps at least twice and held every enlisted tank billet and some officer billets, imparted this advice to junior Marines:

"The small unit leader is a must. Marine NCO's of today need to take charge and continue to march. Don't wait for anyone to tell you," he said. "Your young Marines need guidance and leadership. If you can't or don't want to lead them, then get out of the way. If you make a mistake, correct it and move on."

He also mentioned a troubling fallacy he perceived.

"Today's Marines seem like they need tangible rewards," he said. "They think, 'If I do a good job, I'll get an award.' That's not why we take on a mission. How about doing a good job because that's what is expected of you as a

"The American public expects the Marine Corps to be ready to fight future battles. Today's Marines will keep the Corps and the public proud. I think we'll always be ready to take on any form of aggression."

Marine?"

Speranzi deployed to the Middle East Desert Shield/Storm and was promoted to present rank in 1992. He returned to 2d Tank Bn. in May 1996.

A feather in his cap might be the Corps' Tank Gunnery Competition held at Fort Knox, Ky.

"I have been fortunate to have been with it since its inception six years ago. It's a great competition that pits the best tank all the tank battalions against each other. Second Tanks has won back-to-back competitions. I am pleased with this year's is a great way for me to retire."

"I'm not 2d Tank Battalion," said Speranzi. "It's the Marines who make the battalion keep them on the straight and narrow."

Speranzi extolled the abilities of the Marines in his charge.

"Regardless of the technology or the Corps gets, the key factor is the Marine behind the weapon. There's one consistency in the Marine Corps: the Marines themselves," said Speranzi. "The Marines are the corner stone of the Corps. Take a Marine, the young hard-charger, and the Corps."

Speranzi reflected on the recent attacks here and said he anticipates a strike soon.

"The American public expects the Marine Corps to be ready to fight future battles," he said. "Today's Marines will keep the Corps and the public proud. I think we'll always be ready to take on any form of aggression."

I have done my time and I will miss the life after the Corps. I can't offer the same adrenaline rush, but I'll always be a Marine, always a Marine. I won't leave the Corps that I have known all these years. That title can never be taken away," he said. "Semper Paratus."

MCCSSS thinks it's a family affair

Story and photos by
Sgt. Sharon Allen

Marine Combat Correspondent

Marine Corps Combat Service Support Schools (MCCSSS) held their Fall Family Festival here recently near New River.

Marine Corps Community Services sponsored the day of food and fun, providing many games and activities for children and their parents.

"We're trying to keep the families together," said Carlos Torres, MCCS sports coordinator.

The base stables provided ponies for youngsters to ride, and those who were a little skittish were just as happy to play in the large playground. There was a motorboat offering rides on the water and paddleboats for those who wanted to go slower. Children took advantage of the moonwalkers, jumping until their parents had to coax them out. Children also competed in organized games, such as a balloon toss, some taking advantage of the opportunity to soak their parents. A new attraction featured at this year's family day was Camp Lejeune's military police K-9 unit, who put on a demonstration with their attack dogs. "Cool" was a common word out of many of the children's mouths after watching the demonstration.

In addition to the demonstration, grills were continuously broiling up food for all the hungry mouths waiting to be fed.

"I'm having trouble getting my kids to eat because all they want to do is play," said Sgt. Maj. Clyde Smith, Headquarters and Support Battalion sergeant major. "There is lots for the kids to do."

Although MCCS provided the activities and sponsored the events, it was the Key Volunteers who worked to organize activities and run the show. They also solicited help from the students who were more than willing to attend the event to help with games and take advantage of free food.

"It's an opportunity to meet people, including Staff NCOs, officers and our instructors," said Pfc. Eric R. Remmers of West Minster, Md., a student at the Motor Transport School. "I think it is a good idea, a day for parents and kids to get together."

Although Remmers does not have children of his own, he said he enjoyed spending time with other children. "I volunteered to help with the games. It keeps me out of trouble; otherwise I would just be sitting around. I think this is a lot of fun."

MCCSSS holds family days every spring and fall as a way to get all Marines' and Sailors' families together.

After 20 years, Moore bids farewell

Infantry weapons chief will miss camaraderie, professionalism of Marines

Pfc. Matthew F. Orr

Marine Combat Correspondent

The warriors of 2d Marine Division bid farewell Monday to their infantry weapons chief after 20 years of faithful service to the Corps.

Gunnery Sgt. Steven L. Moore enlisted in the Marine Corps April 24, 1981, two days after his 20th birthday. He attended basic training at Marine Corps Recruit Depot San Diego.

Following boot camp, he attended and completed the Small Arms Repair Course at Aberdeen Proving Grounds, Md. He was then ordered to his first duty assignment at Marine Wing Support Squadron, Cherry Point.

During the past 20 years, Moore has had the opportunity to visit many countries while on deployment. Some of these countries include Honduras, Europe, Japan and Greece.

While serving in Japan, Moore had an opportunity to reflect on military history when he visited Hiroshima.

"Hiroshima was a very memorable place to visit in a historical sense," he said. "It really hit home ... the devastation that happened in World War II."

Moore said that he will miss many things about the Corps, especially the camaraderie and the professionalism between Marines.

After he retires, Moore will return to northern Iowa and work as a computer repairman.

Moore is married to the former Brenda Robidoux of Woonsocket, R.I., and they have two children, Rachel and Carly.

Moore's personal decorations include the Navy and Marine Corps Commendation Medal and the Navy and Marine Corps Achievement Medal with Gold Star.

V. Goldsmith, commander-in-chief for Veterans of Foreign Wars of the United States, gives phone cards to 2d Tank Battalion in honor of their dedicated service to their country as a part of Operation Uplink. Operation Uplink provides members in all armed forces, in country and out, these phone cards to "reach out and touch someone." Col. Michael J. Oehl, commanding officer for the 2d Tank Bn., 2d Marine Division, and Sgt. Maj. Anthony E. Jenkins, the battalion's sergeant major, receive the gift.

Month ago today, our world ... changed," said V. Goldsmith, commander-in-chief for the Veterans of Foreign Wars of the United States. "The Marine Corps has been a part of the world for a long time," he continued, in a speech at the 2d Tank Battalion, 2d Marine Division, held at the Area 4 gym, recently.

"Everything that is happening in the world, you may be asked to fight for your country," said the Vietnam War veteran. "and fight for your country, every day, you make us proud, (VFW) know of your sacrifices," said Goldsmith.

To show VFW's appreciation of the constant sacrifices made by Marines and their families, Goldsmith presented phone cards to the battalion's commanding officer, Lt. Col. Michael J. Oehl, and Sgt. Maj. Anthony E. Jenkins, the battalion's sergeant major, to distribute among the Marines.

"Thank you for this generous gift," said Oehl receiving the box of phone cards.

"Giving the gift of phone cards is part of Operation Uplink. Operation Uplink is a program that was started by the VFW for members of all branches of service," Goldsmith explained. "Its purpose is to provide active-duty military personnel, both in country and abroad, as a way to keep in touch with their families."

Goldsmith said the VFW spent more than $1.2 million on these phone cards, and it was worth every penny. He added he would like to extend his appreciation to those who volunteer for the VFW.

"The VFW, a 102 year-old organization, also makes sacrifices, and I would like people in the armed forces to learn about this," said Goldsmith.

"The volunteers commit to approximately 16 million hours of community service a year, which is equivalent to about $80 million," he said. "I think it is important for all of us to know how hard everyone is working together to make things a little better in this time of grief."

Goldsmith asked one thing from the Marines of the 2d Tank Battalion, "All I ask is that you use these phone cards to call someone you love and tell them you love them too. Thank you for your service and may God bless you all."

I think it is important for all of us to know how hard everyone is working together to make things a little better in this time of grief."

"Write"

Sending message to the troops

Bonnie Powell

FORT LEE, Va. — The writing is on the wall. Letter writing that is.

This fall, commissary shoppers worldwide have the opportunity to write a simple letter of thanks to the men and women in uniform who leave their homes and families to serve their country — sometimes without knowing when they'll be able to return home.

Recent deployments in response to the Sept. 11 terrorist attack mean an ongoing commissary promotion called "Letters to the Front" takes on even more significance this holiday season.

"Although our top priority is saving customers money on their grocery bills," said Defense Commissary Agency (DeCA) Director Air Force Maj. General Robert J. Courter Jr., "We're also involved with many promotions and programs that have a positive impact on our military families and community."

"This is the third year commissaries have been associated with the letter-writing effort," says Kaye Kennedy, DeCA Acting Chief of Corporate Communications.

"It's always been well received by commissary shoppers, but this year it has a special meaning as Americans look for ways to express unity and support for our military."

"During the past two years, thousands of American men and women serving overseas found out how much they are appreciated back home through the "Letters To The Front Worldwide Letter Writing Contest," says coordinator Marsha Roberts of Rector-Roberts Productions. "It's open to anyone, but school children are the biggest participants and the soldiers are delighted to hear from them."

Teachers often make the letter-writing contest a classroom activity.

A platoon sergeant in an infantry unit overseas wrote to say, "Your contest is a great idea because not only does it lift a soldier's spirits while he is so far from home, but it gets the next generation to take an interest in the people defending their country," according to Roberts.

"My entire platoon of twenty people read your letter," wrote an ambulance platoon leader from Camp Bondsteel, Kosovo. "It changed our outlook and brightened our day."

Contest entrants write a letter of support of 100-150 words, starting with: "Dear Service Member, I just wanted to say thanks for..." The letter, attached to an entry form, must be mailed to "Letters To The Front, P.O. Box 25348, Alexandria, VA 22313. All letters must be postmarked no later than Veterans' Day, Nov. 11, 2001. Commissaries do not accept entries or participate in the judging, but entry forms are available on displays at most commissaries. Entry forms can also be accessed at the "What's New" link on www.commissaries.com.

Prizes for best letters are awarded in age groups and the grand prize is a $3,000 computer. Last years winners included a 15-year-old military dependent and an Air Force chaplain, but this year the prizes will take a back seat for most participants.

"The letters sent overseas to service members at the holidays and their overwhelming pleasure at getting them, is much more important," says Mike Watson, regional operations manager for military sales at General Mills, one of the sponsors of "Letters to the Front."

"This is one project we support that makes us feel good," says Gary Boyle, manager of military corporate development at General Mills. "Especially when we see 10,000 letters going overseas - and then see the letters of appreciation coming back from service members."

Get the low down on food labeling confusion

Dear Dietitian,

We try to read labels as much as possible to determine exactly what we are getting in foods, especially since my husband has to watch his cholesterol intake. I am afraid I remain a little confused since the new labeling changes. Is there still fat in a product labeled "fat-free", and how much fat is in something labeled "low fat"? Also, what does the "reduced" label mean and how about "light"?

Sincerely, G. V.

Dear G.V.,

What you are referring to are what is called the core terms for describing the level of a certain nutrient in foods. Let me see if I can explain it a bit further.

"Free" can refer to a product's content of fat, saturated fat, cholesterol, sodium, sugars, or calories. The term means that the product contains no amount of, or only trivial or what the FDA calls "physiologically inconsequential" amounts of fat, saturated fat, cholesterol, and so forth. For example, calorie-free means less than 5 calories per serving and fat-free means less than 0.5 grams of fat per serving. Other words that the FDA allows for "free" are "without," "zero," or "no".

"Low" refers to foods that can be eaten frequently without exceeding the dietary requirements for fat, saturated fat, cholesterol, sodium, and calories (that is, if the dietary requirement should be no more than 30% of your then you can eat "low-fat" foods frequently exceed this guideline). Low-fat meat fat or less per serving, low-saturated gram or less per serving, low-sodium mg of sodium or less per serving, very means 35 mg or less per serving, low means 20 mg or less of cholesterol or less of saturated fats per serving, and means 40 calories or less per serving.

"Reduced" is the term used when a product contains at least 25% less of a nutrient than the regular product (like peanut butter).

"Light" is the term that is used when either the product is one-third fewer calories and one-half one-third fewer calories and one-half regular product. However, it still contains calories and more fat than "fat-free" or "low-fat" ranch dressing.

Military Affairs Committee's 'Service Member of the Month'

Awarding the best of the be

During an evening banquet held at the Paradise Point Officers Club here Oct. 15, Petty Officer Erica R. Garcia, a hospital corpsman with the Naval Hospital here, and Cpl. Ronald K. Wilkins, a motor transportation mechanic with 2d Maintenance Battalion, 2d Force Service Support Group, are awarded the Service Members of the Month for August and September by the Military Affairs Committee of the Jacksonville-Onslow Chamber of Commerce. Both received plaques, Beirut Memorial pin and other items donated by businesses throughout the community.

Sgt. Joshua S. Higgins
Marine Combat Correspondent

The Military Affairs Committee of the Jacksonville-Onslow Chamber of Commerce honored the Service Members of the Month awardees for August and September 2001, Cpl. Ronald K. Wilkins and Petty Officer Erica R. Garcia, during an evening banquet Oct. 15 at the Paradise Point Officers Club here.

During the ceremony, Wilkins, a motor transportation mechanic with 2d Maintenance Battalion, 2d Force Service Support Group, was noted for his exceptional leadership as a noncommissioned officer and his excellent performance while performing his military occupational specialty duties.

"Cpl. Wilkins is an outstanding Marine who

"I am ecstatic and honored to be receiving this award. But I feel like I've just been doing my job."

Petty Officer Erica R. Garcia
Service member of the month sets the example for all," said Bravo Company, 2d Maintenance Bn.'s 1st Sgt. Chermaine M. Martin. "He is one of those high caliber Marines that are few and far between."

Wilkins, a native of Seaford, Del., has been meritoriously promoted to the ranks of private first class out of boot camp, lance corporal at his MOS school, and corporal at his current station.

He has been NCO of the Quarter for 2d Transportation Support Bn. and is currently the NCO of the Quarter for 2d FSSG.

"I feel very honored to receive this award," said Wilkins. "I feel it is a great accomplishment and I hope to pass on the knowledge I have gained to my peers."

Wilkins' goals are to pick up the rank of sergeant, reenlist and go to the drill field.

Hailing from El Paso, Texas, Garcia is a hospital corpsman stationed with the Naval Hospital here. Since October 1998, Garcia has served with the Mother Baby Unit and is currently a leading petty officer. In 2000, Garcia was named as the hospital's "Blue Jacket," which is annually awarded to junior personnel.

"I am ecstatic and honored to be awarded," said Garcia, "but I feel like I'm just doing my job." Garcia's leadership and professionalism isn't limited to her duties at the hospital as she is also a member on the U.S. Marine Organizations advisory board.

"Petty Officer Garcia is certainly an excellent performer and an excellent leader," said Senior Chief Sonya L. Heald, Garcia's supervisor. "Her leadership traits are developed beyond her rank."

Garcia plans to join the Navy active service and attend college at the University of Florida.

Honoring one man's dedication to Corps

Lance Cpl. Paula M. Fitzgerald

There is a saying people often hear, "Always do your best, but don't always expect a pat on the back when you do well."

Every now and then, someone does notice good work and wants to recognize those responsible.

Thus is the case for Jack Tagmyer, the manager of the Auto Body Hobby Shop here. The retired gunnery sergeant was presented a Certificate of Commendation from Maj. Gen. John F. Sattler, 2d Marine Division commanding general, in a ceremony Oct. 4 at the Auto Body Hobby Shop.

"Mr. Tagmyer has probably saved the Marine Corps thousands of dollars," said Sattler. "He was able to design a mount for a machine gun to place on some of our tactical vehicles, like the Humvee."

Tagmyer explained how the mount came into existence.

"A lieutenant who was a weapons officer came to me and said he wanted his Marines to have an edge. If the troops were out in the field driving a Humvee and encountered the enemy, it would be hard for them to protect themselves because the vehicle is not equipped with a machine gun," he said. "It's got a weapon that takes out tanks and other vehicles, but that is it."

Some of the staff, including Tagmyer, worked weekends to develop the mount, which is currently being tested for effectiveness.

The award also recognizes the Jacksonville resident's dedication to the Auto Body Hobby Shop, where he has been manager for 12 years.

"We want to make everyone who comes here to work on their car feel comfortable," stated Tagmyer. "I love working with Marines, whether they are a lance corporal or a colonel. It's a family down here."

Tagmyer and his staff have done an extraordinary job interacting with the Leathernecks working at the shop, according to Sattler.

"Mr. Tagmyer's dedication to the Corps show down here (the shop). He tries to influence the young Marines to stay Marine, and we just want to thank him for that," said Sattler during the ceremony.

Building camaraderie

8th Marines refurbish old lounge into place for NCOs to relax and enjoy themselves

Pfc. Matthew F. Orr
Marine Combat Correspondent

The carpet wasn't red for the occasion, but it was new when Maj. Gen. John F. Sattler, Commanding General of 2d Marine Division, christened a new noncommissioned officer lounge at 3d Battalion, 8th Marines in a ceremony here recently.

The concept was proposed by Sgt. Maj. Hector R. Cerda, the battalion's sergeant major, in a professional military education (PME) seminar.

"The corporals and sergeants didn't have a place to go and socialize like they used to," said Cerda.

"So we utilized our resources such as the hobby shop, battalion funds and the skills that our Marines have to put this together."

Cpl. Andrew M. Rice, a mortar man with Weapons Co., said he appreciates Cerda's vision.

"The sergeant major wanted a place where NCO's could build camaraderie amongst themselves and also give non-NCO's something to strive for," he said.

"I'll definitely come down here to play a few games of pool and relax."

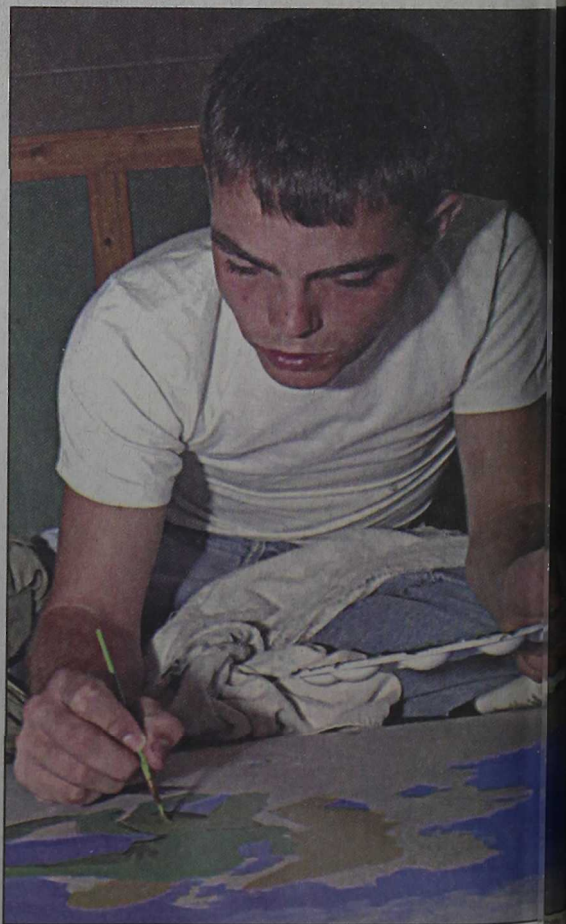

Although the battalion's Marines can relax now, it took a lot of volunteer work to bring this project to reality.

This includes the laying of new carpet, painting, woodwork detailing, murals and the construction of the bar.

"The new lounge will also feature a pool table, two dart boards, television and a supervised operating bar that will be available for certain functions including wet-downs for promotion ceremonies," said Mortarman Sgt. James B. Carl.

The Marine Corps Society has also donated books and magazines for the lounge.

Carl, a native of Richmond, Mich., has been actively involved in the refurbishment of the new lounge from the beginning.

Cpl. Andrew M. Rice, a native of Carthage, Mo., and a mortarman with 8th Marines, paints a mural that will be displayed in the NCO lounge opened Oct. 4, by Maj. Gen. John F. Sattler, commanding general of 2d Marine Division. The new lounge will include a pool table, dart board, lounges, books and magazines that were supplied by the Marine Corps. Work on the lounge was done by Marines on their off-duty time.

"Before the refurbishment took place it was just your average TV lounge," he said. "There wasn't really much there to get people interested in going to the lounge, now there is a place to relax and any NCO in 3d

Battalion are welcome to come. "Work on the lounge was done by Marines in their spare time and the costs for the refurbishment has been paid for by the battalion," said Carl.

Dr. Tim Lee will bring his 'Message of Hope for America' to the 2001 Marine Corps Birthday Prayer Breakfast and Religious Observances Nov. 6.

Purple Heart recipient carries message from God to the nation and Wanda Lee gave their son to the gospel ministry following his conversion in 1950. That son grew to be a spirited athlete. He was converted at age 17 and would soon develop a hostile attitude toward authority. Evangelists have played a major role in the moral and spiritual profile over the past 200 years. Their explosive messages have moved before audiences in churches, auditoriums, public meeting halls, schools, school assemblies, civic clubs, on radio and in the open air. Their life-changing effects on the masses have been dramatic and dramatic in shaping the course of the nation.

The Lord supernaturally prepares and raises up men for a specific day, a specific hour and a specific duty in a nation's life. Because of his widespread public awareness, the call of the evangelist is unique in the ministry. His spirit is aflame, his burden and energy is often times contagious and his anointing is evidenced even by unregenerate men and women.

Tim Lee, the rebellious teenager and son of a Baptist minister, once walked the streets of McLeansboro, Ill., in violent protest to all ordained authority in the home, the church, the school. He was a born fighter. Every inch of his life from childhood was contested for.

To escape the world around him, he joined the Marine Corps in 1969. After his training, he received orders to serve in Southeast Asia.

BANDITS

If you can't wait 'til it hits base, Bandits (PG-13) is playing in Jacksonville.

Bandits, a funny action movie, is the true story of a trio of fugitives — two bank robbers and the woman they love.

When the suavely irresistible Joe and his hypochondriac partner Terry escaped from prison, they cut a swath from Oregon through California, robbing banks in order to finance their scheme for a new, and somewhat legitimate, life south of the Border.

While fleeing from the law, they leave a trail of chaos, disguises, wrecked automobiles and an adoring public in their wake. Their operation runs smoothly until they have an unexpected run-in with an unhappy housewife, Kate, who is drawn to the thieves as a way to escape her ordinary life.

Together Joe and Terry are the most successful bank robbers in U.S. history and, to Kate, they make the perfect man.

REMEMBER THE TITANS

Remember the Titans (PG), also playing on base, tells the true story of Herman Boone, an African American football coach who led a racially divided high school football team, the Titans, to victory in 1971 Alexandria, Va. Boone overcame racial prejudices and bigotry among his team and other coaches to teach players respect, dedication and strength. He became a huge inspiration and role model to the team and made a great impact on the small, closed-minded community. This excellent depiction of a stunning story shows kids learning how to become men and women.

This tale follows the powder-keg situation at T. C. Williams High School, when the aggressive black coach, portrayed by Denzel Washington (The Hurricane), is hired over white local coaching legend Bill Yoast, played by William Patton (Gone in 60 Seconds) to lead the Titans. He inspires the team to work together, and the two men unify their team, guiding it to the state championship and bringing the town together in the process. Also appearing are Donald Faison, Kip Pardue and Craig Kirkwood.

Remember the Titans was directed by Boaz Yakin (A Price Above Rubies). Producer Jerry Bruckheimer takes a stab at racial desegregation after having examined babes in bars (Coyote Ugly), the thrills of car-boasting (Gone in 60 Seconds) and killer asteroids (Armageddon).

From the Front Row
REINHOLD MOLDENHAUER
HUNEYCUTT

Things get more complicated when the police and media assume that Kate is their hostage and organize a massive manhunt to save her from the clutches of Joe and Terry.

Starring in this bank robbery caper are Bruce Willis (Die Hard, The Sixth Sense) and Billy Bob Thornton (Sling Blade, Pushing Tin) as the two modern-day, gentlemen bandits who become media darlings. They plan to finance a life in Mexico with a string of holdups until they encounter and fall for a runaway housewife, played by Cate Blanchett (Elizabeth, The Gift), fleeing her very dull life. Troy Garity, a former Hollywood stunt man, also appears as Harvey, the get-away driver.

Barry Levinson (Sphere, Rain Man, Wag the Dog) directed this comedic crime/road picture featuring the friendliest bank robbers since Bonnie and Clyde.

Retired Maj. Spence Mehl to read from his new book

Compiled by GLOBE Staff

Spence Mehl, who served 23 years in the Marine Corps, will read from his new novel, Sabertops: Time Does Not Exist, Wednesday from 1 to 2:30 p.m. in Coastal Carolina Community College's cafeteria.

Two of today's hottest topics deal with human cloning and genetic manipulation. The Sabertops: Time Does Not Exist uses time travel as a means of looking at where we are today in that regard and how and why human cloning and genetic manipulation will, in the author's opinion, inevitably occur.

The 24th Century is a world full of diversity. People of all races and religions choose either to live "Natural" lives or to become Sabertops, people who, through cloning and genetic manipulation, live in a world where there is no crime, no disease, no physical defects or deformities and who enjoy a type of physical reincarnation that allows them to live hundreds of years. Much of this is accomplished through the Sabertop Device, as essential to 24th Century mankind as the wheel is to modern transportation.

Traveling back through time to the 21st Century, scientist and 24th Century "Sabertop" Shaoping Chen makes her first successful attempt at time travel. Dr. Chen-Ping — as family and colleagues better know her — meets a forefather of the 24th Century way of life and ponders the ethics and morality of it all.

After arriving in the 21st Century, but before she can return to her own era, she becomes involved in a murder and the disappearance of someone important to her mission. Catching the killer and rectifying a mistake all depend on the nonexistence of time.

The novel is a science-fiction mystery that involves murder and kidnapping woven within a number of important issues for the 21st Century: individual privacy, pollution, space exploration and the necessity for our colonization of other worlds, as well as human cloning and genetic manipulation.

Author Mehl enlisted in the Marine Corps in 1956 and, after attaining the rank of sergeant, was selected meritoriously to attend Officer Candidate School. Before retiring in 1978, he earned the rank of major and was awarded the Navy Commendation Medal. A business administration instructor, Mehl has been teaching at Coastal for 13 years. Coffee and refreshments will be served during the signing. Proceeds from books sold at the reading will be donated to the College Foundation, which provides scholarships for students based on financial need.

The Sabertops: Time Does Not Exist. By Spence Mehl. Available from iUniverse.com. 320 pp., $17.95. To order, call (877) 823-9235 or visit www.BN.com, www.amazon.com or www.borders.com.

'Penny' for your thoughts

The Harriette B. Smith Library has "A History of Coinage" on display through Dec. 11. The exhibit, on loan from Gar Travis, American Numismatic Association assistant national coordinator and Jacksonville resident, incorporates coinage, historical information and enlarged photographs showing the obverse and reverse of each coin in the display as a visual aide.

Chronologically arranged from 500 BCE through the seventeenth century CE, the 26 coins offer an overview of the impact of geography, art and history through the ages. Those interested in knowing more about the display can contact me via e-mail at jean.sybrant@usmc-mccs.org or Travis at oldmoney@coastalnet.com.

Additionally, based on interest shown by the visiting public, The Harriette B. Smith Library Numismatic Society has joined the ANA as Club # 1199083 and invites both military and civilian hobbyists — adults and youths — to join in the fellowship of coin, medal, token and paper money collecting. The club will be administrated with the help of Travis. I visualize this club as a way to gain knowledge and share education through the use of coins and to involve both adults and youth in a nurturing hobby that teaches both patience and perseverance. The membership coin club will host an introductory meeting Nov. 5 at 6:30 p.m. in the library conference room.

Those attending may bring coins or currency to talk about and to have identified. The gathering will also involve setting up future meeting days and times for the club, as well as establishing club officers and bylaws in accordance with membership requirements of the ANA. As a gift at the request of Travis, the ANA has given the first year's membership dues.

The ANA, headquarters in Colorado Springs, Colo., (www.money.org) was founded in 1891 and received a Federal Charter by the United States Congress in 1912, which has been renewed in perpetuity since 1962. The ANA maintains the distinction of being one of the very few organizations in the U.S. to operate under a Federal Charter. Today, with about 30,000 members, the nonprofit, educational group is the largest organization of its kind in the world. It is supported entirely by membership dues, gifts and the sale of its publications and services. The ANA was formed to advance the knowledge of numismatics along educational, historical and scientific lines, as well as to enhance interest in the hobby. To further this purpose, the ANA offers numerous services and programs, including a monthly journal, The Numismatist. The journal will be available in the periodical section of the library.

All preschoolers through fifth graders are invited to our Halloween Costume Party Friday at 6 p.m. Costumes are not required, but you should come ready to have fun and enjoy early-bird prizes from 5:30 to 5:50 p.m., a costume judging with prizes and entertainment by Miss Priss the Clown. Registration for this free event is limited to the first 40 to sign up at the circulation desk by today.

Harry Potter fans have a chance for free passes for the movie when the movie version comes to base. Children under the age of seven who draw two favorite characters from the Harry Potter books and tell why each character was chosen and children ages eight and up who write an essay on their favorite Harry Potter character and another about the character they love to hate will receive a free pass to the base theater. Bring drawings/essays along with a full name and telephone number to the library circulation desk. After checking the papers, I will call you to come pick up your free theater ticket.

Stop by Wednesday at 5 p.m. for online card catalog assistance. The one-on-one lesson will help middle and high school students and adult patrons learn their way around our system.

Adults can learn about good nutrition during "For the Health of It," held in the library Conference Room today from 11:30 a.m. to 12:30 p.m. Come learn new things, meet new people and win great stuff! Registration is limited; call Natalie Neumann at 451-0821 to reserve a seat.

Storytime for preschool children is held at Midway Park Community Center Monday at 9 a.m.; Tuesday at Midway Park Chapel at 10 a.m.; Wednesday at 9 and 10 a.m. at Tarawa Terrace Community Center; and Thursday at the Base Library Conference Room from 9:30 to 10 a.m. for two to three-year-olds and from 10:30 to 11 a.m. for four to six-year-olds. This week's theme is "Dragons."

Deadline Vietnam

Lee recounts spiritual evolution

"Let's go Marines," I said quietly as I led my men down an abandoned road in Quang Nam Province in Vietnam. The road was probably constructed by the French a generation before Americans arrived in Nam. Bomb craters pitted the landscape, some of them 20 feet wide and 6 to 7 feet deep. We were looking for land mines, puny pits and undetonated rounds. We didn't realize it at the moment, but we had just walked into a Viet Cong minefield. On a mine sweep, you walk slowly; watching, listening, feeling. This particular road, very little of which was still distinguishable, hadn't been swept in two years. We made our way through a section of tall elephant grass and reached a clearing. The crumbling remains of a Buddhist temple was just in front of us. The grass was now knee high leaving us dangerously exposed and in the open. A strange feeling came over some of the men. Something wasn't right.

One last step, and then it happened - my boot landed squarely on what felt like a miniature volcano. A deafening blast rammed through my body. As Earl Lewis, the fifth man in formation later testified, I disappeared in the sudden eruption.

As a cloud of black smoke shot into the sky, hot fire surged through what remained of my legs. "Hit the ground!" someone yelled. "Mortar!" shouted another Marine. Pieces of my own flesh literally covered the upper part of my body. Shrapnel from the blast pierced my fore arms and the sides of my forehead and had bent my helmet flap into a straight up position. My M-16 was blown in half. I went in and out of consciousness as people scrambled all around me. Lewis yelled "Corpsman!" The radioman, several yards to the rear of my position began to radio for a Medi-Vac.

There was much confusion. One man, Corporal Lee Gore, knelt down and picked me up in his arms and braced my back on his knees. He began to pray out loud. I was shaking terribly and literally covered in my own blood.

The smoke and dust from the blast was still thick in the air. Men began to shed their t-shirts to help soak the blood flowing profusely from my wounds. Some gave their personal bandages. The Corpsman began working feverishly applying tourniquets to my upper thighs to stop the blood flow. In a weak, barely audible voice I prayed, "Oh no! ... God, not my legs ... Lord ... please ... God get me I'll home to Mom and Dad ... do whatever you want me to do." Then, total blackness. I went out. Yellow smoke from the marking grenades to help guide the in-coming choppers billowed upward. I remember hearing the faint sounds of the swirling blades as they raised tons of steel into the air. Myself and a South Korean Marine, who had lost a foot in a separate explosion, left a violent world below. We were flown to the hospital ship USS Sanctuary in the South China Sea. From there I was taken to Guam.

After My recovery at the Philadelphia Naval Hospital, it was sad to remember how all this had come about in my life. Strangely enough, the shameful events that brought about the tragic moment began six years earlier, at age 14. For the first time, I directly rebelled against the authority of my parents in our home and began to run with the wrong crowd. My life went downhill from that moment. I had been raised in a preacher's home. At ten years of age, while listening to my Dad preach, I received Jesus Christ as my Savior. For several months I lived for the Lord. But when I became a teenager, something gradually began to change inside of me. Sports became the obsession of my life. Little by little I put self before the Lord. I began running towards tragedy and a deadline with God. The call of God became less and less important in my thinking. During my junior year in high school, I set two track records in the long jump and high hurdles. My name began to appear in the local newspapers.

Upon graduation from high school I was living far from God. My life was a continuing nightmare and full of confusion. After one year of Junior college, I joined the Marine Corps.

Within a matter of weeks a bus took me to Parris Island, S.C., for boot camp. The Marines were tough. My attitude quickly began to change. Within 90 days I had become a real Marine, and, within a few months, I received orders for duty in Vietnam. Three weeks leave was spent at home with Mom and Dad. I went to church and tried to make things right with God. I thought I had. Mom and Dad took me to the airport in St. Louis the next day. As soon as the plane lifted from the runway, I told God I could not live for Him around other Marines. I was afraid they would make fun of me.

Eleven months quickly passed during my tour of duty. Going home was a little less than 30 days away. Nam had been a good experience for me, and one of the main reasons was the friendship of a very special Marine - Lee Gore. Gore, a black Marine, was a Christian and not ashamed of it. Many times he would sit on his rack and read his Bible. I had seen him pray, and talk to other Marines about the Lord. He often spoke to me about living for the Lord. I knew this was the kind of testimony

On March 8, 1971, the darkest day of my life arrived. Orders were received to take my men on a mine sweep. I decided to walk point, which meant I would be the front man in the formation. Normally, I would have been in the back of the squad with the radioman, the corpsman and the lieutenant.

There was no attempt to be a hero, simply the desire to show my new men how to walk point. We walked that morning and stopped at noon to eat our c-rations. Gore asked if he could take over as point but, for some reason, I told him that I would finish the day.

A little over one hour later I stepped on a sixty pound box mine. After 30 seconds of numbness, I regained consciousness. Gore, in shock, anger, amazement, and deep concern was holding me in his lap. With tears running down his face, he was praying, asking God to help me. God heard his prayers.

Mom and Dad, during the next four-week period, received over 30 telegrams and personal visits from the Marine Corps. From a human standpoint, and from all they had been told, they never expected to see their oldest son alive again. My body weight had gone from 185 pounds to less than 80 pounds ... but God had a plan for my life! (Romans 8:28) Though His chastening hand had acted swiftly, it ultimately brought a sense of peace into my heart. I had known all along that I belonged to God for a purpose. The Bible says, "happy is the man whom God correcteth ... despite not thou the chastening of the Almighty." (Job 5:17) Revelation 3:19 says, "As many as I love, I rebuke and chasten: be zealous therefore, and repent."

During the next several months, thirteen major operations were performed. When the doctor's put their knives away, three inches remained on my right leg, eleven inches on my left leg. God had taken the legs that had carried me from His will. My running had finally ended.

Coming home to Illinois, I went to my Dad's church and made things right. I also surrendered my life to the ministry. Since that time I have preached all over the world that men and women may be saved by God's grace.

The preceding is an excerpt from Deadline: Vietnam The Day My Running Stopped, the personal testimony of Lee, double amputee and Purple Heart recipient of the Vietnam War. For more information on Tim Lee Ministries, call (972) 276-3168 or visit www.timlee.org.

In March 1971, he apprehended by the hand along an abandoned grass in Quang Nam Province, Vietnam.

In that moment, engulfed in smoke, fire and vengeance, a land mine severed two lower legs and placed in a wheelchair a young man who carried, without legs, a message from God to a nation.

After his call to preach in 1973, and following a itinerant evangelistic preaching tour, Lee pastored for five years in southern Illinois before returning to the full-time ministry of evangelism in 1979.

The results in the ministry were almost immediate as the former Marine began to stir and challenge God's people across the country.

People of all ages, including teenagers, professionals, United States Congressmen and Senators, Governors, Mayors and other elected officials.

They heard a clear, compelling message guided deep in old-fashioned fundamentalism, righteous living and a spiritual revival.

Beirut 10-K Run remembers those who came in peace hundreds of runners from around the community, and the country, set off for the Grand Prix Event, the Beirut Memorial 10K Run, Saturday at Camp Johnson.

Blue skies and warm weather were pleasant additions to the successful Beirut Memorial 10K run where hundreds gathered at Camp Johnson Saturday to remember fallen heroes. This year marks the 18th anniversary of the bombing of Marine barracks in Beirut, which claimed the lives of 241 Marines and 19 U.S. Navy sailors. "We hold this run every year to keep alive the memories of those that died in Beirut," said Mike Marion, MCCS fitness event coordinator. "I had heard of the event and knew what it stood for, so I decided to run it this year for the first time," said everyone who has fallen to terrorism and pledge to do away with it." According to Marion, there were 243 participants registered from nine states, and 80 percent of racers were active-duty military. Race participants took their places at the starting line, and following morning colors they set off for their six-mile run. "I think their support and attitudes reflect positively on the 241 who died," said David J. Reintjes, MCCS deputy of special projects, a Millington, Tenn. native. "The reason people come is to recognize those who came in peace." Reintjes delivered the invocation before the race began, praying for the Beirut victims, and emphasizing the significance of the event to the racers. "I had heard of the event and knew what it stood for, so I decided to run it this year for the first time," said

Andrew Bartle finished in second place at Saturday's run.

LOS takes first place in field meet Logistics Operations School (LOS) stole the trophy from former champions Supply School during the Marine Corps Combat Service Support Schools (MCCSSS) semi-annual field meet at Camp Lejeune.

The meet allowed students and instructors to participate in an afternoon of fun and sports.

"The event gives the Marines a break from academics," said Clarence T. Judd, a from Sandford, and a substance abuse officer with S-3, Headquarters and Service Battalion (H & S), who helped organize the sporting event.

"It builds camaraderie between the students and the permanent personnel. I think the event was a success, and everyone comes back Monday refreshed. The students got a chance to compete with their instructors, which gives them a sense of teamwork."

MCCSSS schools and units competed in 15 events that included tug of war, three-mile squad run, 8x100 relay, obstacle course, volleyball and basketball games.

Some of the military-flavored events included a 'run of ranks' which involves a baton being passed from higher ranks to lower ranks during a race, a shelter-half, fireman carry, rescue board and the stretcher relays.

Humorous events included the wheel barrel race and "dizzy-izzy" relay. The anteater relay brought laughter to spectators (and participants), as patrons placed a cone on their face and tried to kick golf balls across the finish line, only being able to see out of the one-inch diameter hole.

Units received points for completing events. Ten points went to first place winners, eight to second place, and so on.

LOS won first place with 110 points, and placed first in five events. Many participants said LOS's strongest event was the Tug of War.

Supply School came in a close second with 100 points, winning only two events. H & S Battalion won five events and finished with 86 points.

Personnel Administration and Legal Services School scored 82 points, and Financial Management School held their heads high with 42.

Although not everyone went home with a trophy, everyone enjoyed the half-day off break from regular duties. The field meet was designed to build teamwork and camaraderie. Participants agreed that it had accomplished its mission.

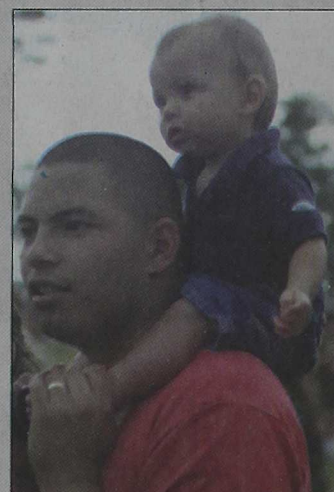

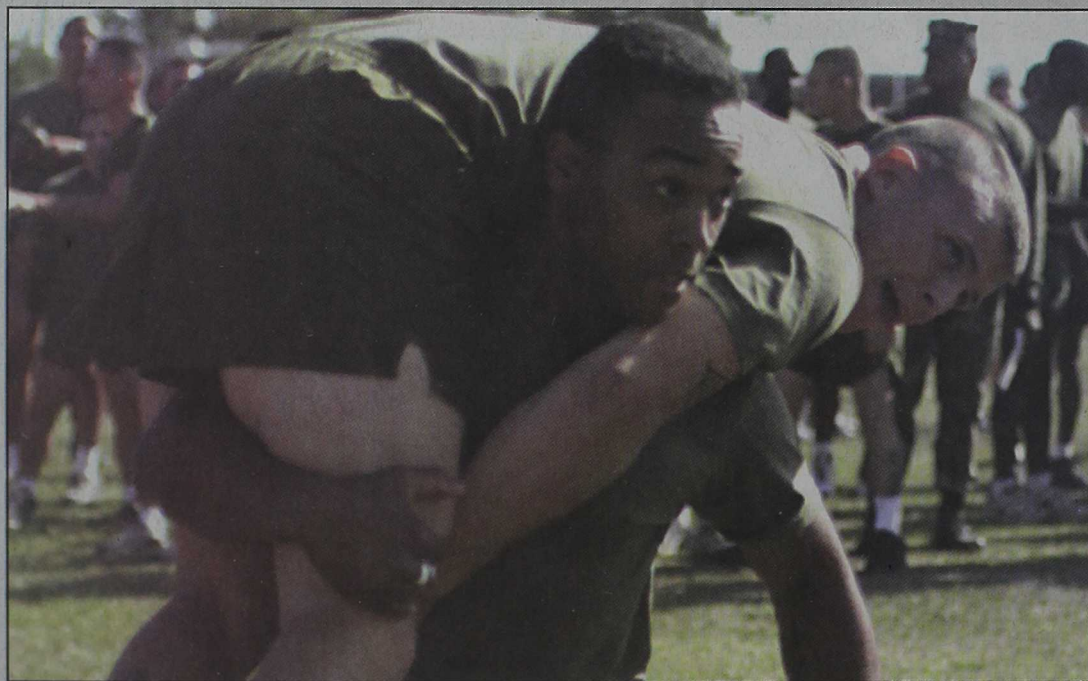

"I think it shows the Marines Marine Corps camaraderie and motivation amongst personnel," said Travis E. Bartels, a student in the motor transport non-commissioned officers' course.

"The camaraderie is excellent," said Casey D. Faughnan, a transport instructor at LOS, who brought his son, Corey, to the event.

"I got eight Marines right there waiting to run the wheelbarrow race together."

"There's a lot of teamwork," said Carlos Torres, Marine Corps Community Services sports coordinator, who supported the event to foster healthy competition.

Following the awards ceremony, the schools followed MCCS commanding officer, Col. Jonathan Pasco, in a run circling the field. LOS Marines held their wings high for all to see.

HELP YOUR FAMILY

CFC #2111

For 39 years, the Marine Corps Scholarship Foundation has helped the children of Marines and former Marines to achieve their dreams of higher education. We have provided over $18.5 million in scholarships to financially needy applicants, as well as more than $3.5 million to all surviving children of U.S. servicemen killed in combat during the 1991 Gulf War and the Beirut Barracks attack. Your Combined Federal Campaign donation to agency #2111 will support an "all-volunteer" organization focusing on youth, education, and values.

Sporting news lifted spirits overseas

Once a Marine, always a Marine

JOHN GUNN

"We called it (Vietnam) 'the world' because we felt like we were on a different planet," Giants assistant coach Jay Robertson told columnist Ian O'Connor of USA Today and The Westchester County, N.Y. Journal News.

A Marine company commander then, he said, "When you got sports news ... it meant so much, because we were starved for anything representing home."

Robertson "can tell you about the foxhole sermons on Lombardi's Packers and the day-time debates over pennant races, this while Marines waited or their nightly brushes with madness and fear," O'Connor wrote.

"I begged my parents to send me the sports pages, and every week or two they'd come in a big envelope," Robertson said.

Near-death encounters "left the Marines needing the type of tape-delayed division they got one night in the mess tent," O'Connor wrote.

"Our battalion commander had the film of that great Notre Dame-Michigan State game two weeks after it was played," he said.

"We had Marines in there who weren't sports fans who just needed to watch."

O'Connor also quoted Hall of Fame guard Alex Agase, a World War II Marine veteran, as saying he wished he had such breaks between the firefights on Okinawa, "but we didn't have the access and the media then."

Agase, holder of a Bronze Star and Purple Heart, lost his best friend, Tony Butkovich, on Okinawa, then spent postwar days supervising 5,000 Japanese soldiers in China.

Agase was an All-American at Illinois in 1942, at Purdue in 1943 (as a Marine V-12 trainee) and at Illinois in 1946. Butkovich, who lettered at Illinois in 1942, was also an All-American at Purdue in 1943 (as a Marine V-12 trainee).

COLLEGE FOOTBALL

Dave Minnich, a Marine vet, ran for a career-high 195 yards on 34 carries, caught a TD pass and threw for a TD on his first Cougar passing attempt as Washington State (then 5-0 overall and 3-0 in the Pac-10) defeated Oregon State, 34-27.

That made him the conference's leading rusher. But he tore cartilage in his right knee and was expected to be out of action for up to a month.

Washington State Coach Mike Price told ESPN he expected Minnich to play Saturday when the Cougars (now 7-0 and ranked No. 14 and 15 in polls) host Oregon (No. 11 and 13).

"After all, he's an ex-Marine," and somehow he'll find a way to play," Price said.

Minnich, who played at Camp Pendleton and Mount San Jacinto JC, was Washington State's leading rusher last season as a junior.

Boston College, coached by Marine vet Tom O'Brien, defeated Pittsburgh, 45-7.

Div. I-AA Wofford, coached by Marine vet Mike Ayers, lost to Appalachian, 34-23.

Div. II Bloomsburg, coached by Marine vet Danny Hale, downed Mansfield, 41-6.

Div. III Pacific Lutheran, coached by Marine veteran Frosty Westering, beat Southern Oregon, 48-38.

And NAIA member Montana Tech, coached by Marine veteran Bob Green, dropped Montana State-Northern, 17-14.

Meanwhile, the Western Illinois Leathernecks lost to Northern Iowa, 17-14.

Stan McGarvey, the coach at West Texas A&M and a Marine veteran, will become assistant to the president for special projects once the season closes.

He coached William Jewell from 1978-80, Austin in 1983, and in 1987-88, Missouri Western from 1991-97, and West Texas A&M since 1998.

With a 38-35 victory over Northwestern, Penn State coach Joe Paterno tied Navy veteran Paul "Bear" Bryant for the most Division I victories with 323.

Number 10 with a 232-178-10 record is Marine veteran Hayden Fry, the coach at SMU from 1962-72, at North Texas from 1973-78 and at Iowa from 1979-98.

Wide receiver Isaac Brown, a Marine veteran, caught 5 passes for 36 yards as Florida A&M downed Norfolk State, 47-9.

He had caught nine passes for 144 yard in a 33-27 victory over South Carolina State and seven for 45 yards in a 55-23 loss to North Carolina A&T.

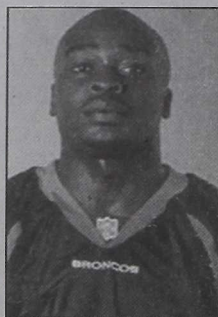

Marine veteran George Franck led Minnesota to the national title in 1940.

He was selected on 22 All-America first teams, was third in the Heisman Trophy voting and was MVP of the 1941 College All-Star Game.

He has not been elected to the College Football Hall of Fame.

Draw your own conclusions about the Hall.

The Naval Academy won't add an 11th game to replace its contest with Northwestern that was canceled after the World Trade Center and Pentagon attacks, USA Today reported.

PRO FOOTBALL

The Chargers surprised the Broncos, 27-10, to run their record to 4-2. Last season, San Diego won one game.

"The biggest difference this year," USA Today reported, is "all those free agents brought in by new General Manager John Butler (a Marine veteran), the leading candidate on everybody's Executive of the Year list."

In the game, Marine veteran Mike Anderson of Denver rushed for 50 yards on 11 carries.

The game at San Diego was not far from Camp Pendleton, where Anderson performed, or from Mt. San Jacinto JC, where he starred two seasons.

Going into the contest, Anderson had gained 308 yards on 76 carries.

Against the Ravens, he carried 12 times for 34 yards in a 20-13 loss.

But in a 20-6 victory over the Chiefs, he collected 155 yards on 22 carries. In a 34-21 loss to the Seahawks, he gained 51 yards on 17 tries and caught 2 passes for 9 yards.

"It was just one of those days where a lot of things didn't go our way" against the Seahawks," he told USA Today. "A lot of bad things happened."

Browns owner Al Lerner, a Marine veteran, was named to the Foreign Intelligence Advisory Board by President Bush, USA Today reported.

The board "gives independent advice to the President on the quality of the nation's intelligence system" the paper reported.

Lerner is chairman of MBNA Corp., the country's second largest credit card company.

Tampa Bay lost to Pittsburgh, 17-10, dropping to a 2-3 record despite having a new and experienced quarterback. The Bucs have scored only 78 points.

A year ago, when Marine veteran Les Steckel was offensive coordinator, the Bucs despite having an inexperienced quarterback went 10-6 and averaged 24.25 points a game. He was fired.

Draw your own conclusions.

A TV announcer Sunday for the Bengals game was Brian Baldinger, end Jim Baldinger (Annapolis, Quantico and Pensacola 1954.)

BASEBALL

Rod Carew, one of the best catchers of all time and a Marine veteran, was unable to snap the Brewers out of a season slump, has resigned.

The Hall of Famer was Milwaukee's coach.

"During the coming off-season, decisions will have to be made regarding improving the team's performance on the field," Carew said. "When my contract expires, I've decided to leave the team, new times, new challenges, new decisions easier one and step aside."

Carew, 56, won seven World Series during his 19-year career.

The Indians, whose owner is Marine veteran Lawrence Dolan, traded Carew to the Mariners, 3 games to the American League playoffs.

The Devil Rays fired first baseman including Marine veteran Livan Hernandez, the pitching coach.

SOCCER

USA Weekend says the legendary Marine pilot Christian Corry, who coached the U.S. national team, was going weeks without seeing each other, months, without seeing each other, Hamm, 29, openly regrets.

They separated a year ago and began proceedings this summer. They have not seen each other since.

Hamm plays for the Washington Wizards. Corry is stationed in San Diego, where he coaches the San Diego Sockers.

"As if distance weren't enough, problems, tabloid stories about an increasingly 'cozy relationship' between the two players, and Corry's shortstop Nomar Garciaparra helped," USA Weekend said.

"The two have been friends for years and attend each other's games when they can."

PASSINGS

Capt. James Caudill, a World War II pilot on a dive-bomber, died at 80. An All-American school football player in Kentucky, he was an end at Morehead (Ky.) State.

After the war, he coached varsity sports at Louisa and Hazard highs in Kentucky and named Kentucky High School Football Player of the Year in 1959.

From 1972-82, he was the Hazard High principal and then became superintendent of Hazard schools.

John Gunn is an independent journalist, retired Marine intelligence officer, and author of two books on Marines and the Vietnam War.

Where were you?

On October 23, 1983, 241 Americans lost their lives during a brutal terrorist attack in Beirut, Lebanon.

Fast-forward almost 18 years to September 11, 2001 when more than 5,000 Americans were murdered in three separate suicide terrorist attacks in New York and Washington D.C.

This brings us to October 20, 2001 when MCCS sponsored a Beirut Memorial 10K race advertised to remember those who gave their lives for their country - making the ultimate sacrifice for freedom.

'A Run to Remember.'

I was so confident that we would have a great turnout, and that this race would see more participants than it ever had in the past, that I approached the Commanding Officer of MCC-SSS and personally supervised that added security measures necessary for Force Protection Condition Charlie to ensure this race was not cancelled.

May I say with all boldness that you don't have a very good memory.

There were only 244 runners.

I was there. My 19-year old son in the U.S.

Army ran along side me. Ages of participants ranged from a 12-year-old boy to a man in his mid-70s.

And who could forget the team from 2d Reconnaissance Battalion carrying the Marine Corps colors throughout the race. Yes! We were there.

We ran to remember the fathers, husbands, friends, and others who died on that early Sunday morning and whose names are now engraved forever on the Beirut Memorial wall.

But, where were you?

Stephens is the commanding officer of Headquarters and Support Battalion, MCC-SSS.

RUN from 1D

Henry R. Ford, from Walterboro, S.C., an instructor with the Camp Johnson Personnel Administration School. "I think it is a significant event." A Beirut Memorial display was located inside the gymnasium to provide detailed information about the bombing and those who died. As a tribute to the victims of the reconnaissance platoon of Alpha Company, Marines of 6th Platoon, Force Reconnaissance Company, 2d Recon Battalion, carried the Alpha Company colors the duration of the course.

Although the significance of the event is what brought out the recon runners, Andrew R. Christian said the race was also an excellent recruiting opportunity for them.

"If there is a race, we are there," said the 6th Platoon commander, and a Neenah, Wis. native. "We met several eligible candidates today and we are actively recruiting them. We usually find the type of people we need at these kinds of events."

The first place winner of the race was Carlos Maldonado, an x-ray technician from Donna, Texas who traveled from Indian Head, Md. to run the race. He completed the 10K course in 33:39.

Andrew Bartle, and aviation supply officer, Marine Aviation Logistics Squadron 26, Marine Corps Air Station New River, of Bryn Marr, Pa. placed second with a time of 33:46.

In a time of 34:02, Blake Benke of Minnetonka, Minn., a supply officer with 8th Communication Battalion, II Marine Expeditionary Force, placed third overall.

The top female runner, with a time of 37:57, was Patty Stewart of Jacksonville, N.C., who is a doctor at the OB/GYN Clinic at Camp Lejeune Naval Hospital.

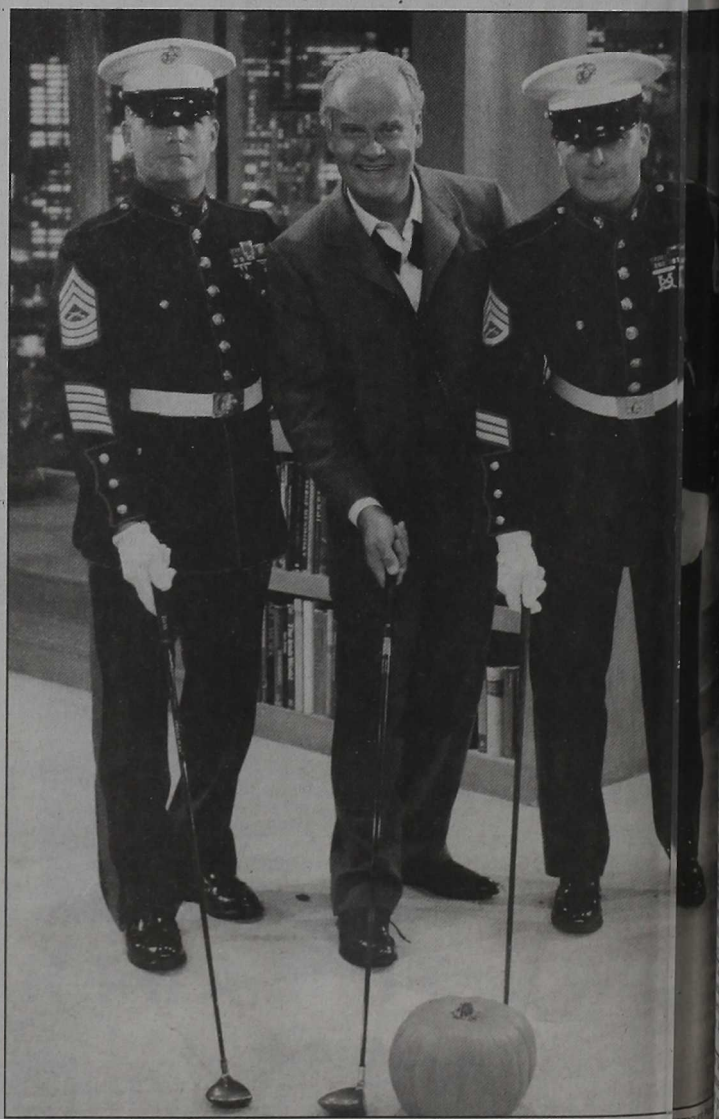

Stewart said she will be 40 years old in February, but she still runs about 60 miles each week, and she is currently training for the Battleship Half Marathon, which will take place next month in Wilmington, at the USS North Carolina.

MCCS provided musical entertainment for the patrons who came to cheer on friends and family who were running.

The Beirut 10K was a Grand Prix Series event. For more information, call 451-1799.
