Mundy pays final visit to Camp Lejeune

Cpl. Lance M. Bacon
Globe staff

General Carl E. Mundy Jr., Commandant of the Marine Corps, paid his final visit to Camp Lejeune last week before retiring June 30.

The 30th Commandant began the visit with an early morning haircut from Dan Willaforde — the same barber who gave Gen. Mundy his first haircut upon entering the Fleet Marine Force 37 years ago.

"On the day I came down here as a second lieutenant in 1958, it was about 1700 and I thought I better get a haircut since I was reporting into the Division the next morning, so I got my first haircut from Dan," Gen. Mundy said. "About two years ago, Dan said it was about time to retire, so I light-heartedly told him 'you can't go until I go until I go — I was counting on you to give me my last haircut while on active duty.' He took me to heart and stuck around, so Dan's going to retire me out of the Marine Corps with a Willaforde Special."

General Mundy also visited the Marines of Camp Lejeune during breakfast at the 2d Marine Regiment mess hall.

"My first tour of duty was here with 2d Marines and when I left Camp Lejeune as a regimental commander it was with 2d Marines, so this morning I went over and ate breakfast at the 2d Marines mess hall," he said.

Ending his final tour of Camp Lejeune, Gen. Mundy paid a visit to the Jacksonville United Services Organization to personally give thanks for all the USO had done for Marines in the past 54 years, and become a member of their fraternal "Dinosaur Regiment."

During the visit, he reflected on his 38-year career — in particular, the battles he and the Marine Corps have faced during his four years as Commandant.

"My thoughts on the Corps are very positive because I've never seen the Corps better than it is today," he said. "It's better than it was when I came in overall fitness — not just the physical fitness of the people, but the mental agility, the education level, the intellect, the determination, the dedication...all of those things. We were good when I came in, but the Corps just gets better and better."

But though the Corps continues to excel, it wasn't without hardship during Gen. Mundy's commandancy.

"I think legitimizing the size of the Marine Corps was the biggest challenge because the decision had already been made to take the Marine Corps down to a level that would have been dysfunctional," Gen. Mundy said. "We would not have been able to execute the national military strategy for the Marine Corps with numbers that low."

"But, as is often the case, those who make the decision are not always aware of all the implications," he said. "It's very easy to say 'we'll just take 25 percent off the top,' so my main effort was to explain to people what the Marine Corps does. People always want to say 'it's another land army or another Air Force,' but it's not. (The Marine Corps) is a very unique instrument in this nation's arsenal. Once people understand that it costs less, in every measured sense, for a United States Marine (to perform) than any other part of the armed forces, and people see the utility of Marines in something like the Bosnia rescue of Capt. Scott O'Grady, the introduction into or the exit from Somalia, the Haiti operation or Desert Shield and Desert Storm, it comes to you that your first strength is the United States Marine Corps. The last outfit you want to take apart is your first team."

During a "Bottom's Up Review," held to determine the validity of initial downsizing requirements placed on each service, Gen. Mundy put forth his argument and was able to raise the allowable size of the Marine Corps from the targeted 159,000 to his recommended 174,000. While Gen. Mundy was able to ease the drawdown requirements during the review, all other branches of service received further cuts in addition to the initial downsizing requirements — the Army was ordered to cut an additional four divisions; the Air Force was ordered to cut seven of 14 air wings; and the Navy went from almost 600 ships to 331.

Though his efforts have protected the Marine Corps' operational abilities, Gen. Mundy is quick to point out that it doesn't mean there are no issues to be faced by the next Commandant.

UNITAS departs

United American States (UNITAS) forces left Continental United States recently to perform a routine six-month deployment to West Africa and South America.

The Marine Air Ground Task Force (MAGTF) falls under Task Force 138, whose primary mission is to provide simple public relations with outside military forces displaying openly the American flag and the Marine Corps, according to Maj. Cleve R. Davis, commanding officer, UNITAS Forces.

"I want troops to show outside military forces what today's Marine Corps is capable of," Davis said. "At the same time though, show these same forces and their countries the camaraderie and respect we have within Marine Corps ranks."

UNITAS is smaller than units that most people associate a six-month deployment with. The Marine Expeditionary Unit (MEU) is huge compared to UNITAS' two rifle platoons, one weapons platoon, an Amphibious Assault Vehicle Detachment and a Air Naval Gunfire Liaison Company Detachment, Davis said.

"We are not a MEU, I hope everyone understands that," he said. "But UNITAS is capable of handling any contingency that may come up in our general area."

The training cycle has been non-stop for the UNITAS volunteer Marines and Sailors since chopping over, according to 1stLt. Chris Terashima, operations officer.

"Like a MEU, UNITAS performed Type Commanders Amphibious Training and phase-level training at

Seabee detachments complete six-month renovation of open-bay barracks aboard Camp Geiger

LCpl. Scott J. Metzner

The Seabees of Naval Mobile Construction Battalion-23 completed a six-month renovation of two School of Infantry barracks aboard Camp Geiger June 29.

The project came to an end after 12 Seabee reservist detachments from Pennsylvania, Ohio, Maryland and Virginia each spent two weeks working on the barracks, said Senior Chief Petty Officer Kenneth J. Kubilus, on site project manager.

"It's been a great experience working with the Marine Corps on this project," he said. "This is my last year with the Seabees, and I've always wanted to manage a project like this."

This isn't the first project the Seabees have completed for the Marines of Camp Geiger. For the past two years, they have renovated two barracks per year, according to Col. Howard Lovingood, commanding officer, SOI.

"The Seabees have made tremendous contributions to helping us meet our mission with these projects," he said. "They were out there working in the cold winter months through the spring rain, right up to the summer heat. They are a group of very skilled and dedicated workers."

Both of the barracks are 4,200 square feet and divided into 18 rooms: 16 one-man rooms, a laundry room and mechanical room. They were renovated from open-bay style barracks that had been closed for one year.

"They took those old, run down barracks that looked like pillboxes shot up by rocket-propelled grenades and turned them into beautiful basic enlisted quarters," said Lovingood.

The newly renovated barracks will serve as homes for SOI instructors.

"Our instructors put in long hours in the field," Lovingood said. "They deserve to have the quality living quarters the Seabees have built."

Working as a team with the Marine Corps paying for materials and the Seabees providing the skilled labor, SOI instructors not only have a new home, but the Marine Corps saved quite a bit of money, said Kubilus.

"This project saved more than $500,000," he said. "The only work

Risk for disease small after hog waste spill

Onslow County Health Director, Danny Jacob, recently stated that local Public Health officials have consulted with state health officials in regard to any potential threat to public health the agriculture waste spill might cause.

Although there is potential for disease transmission through contact with the waste, the risk is small. Due to the probable increase in bacteria counts in the river, the Health Department is still advising the public to avoid areas affected by the spill.

Swimming, skiing and other unnecessary contact with the water from Northeast Creek upstream in the New River is still discouraged.

The Health Department will continue to work with the Division of Environmental Management and other agencies to monitor the situation. Further advisories will be issued as necessary.

Marine Corps boasts illustrious history

Glenn Pappas
Base library

The United States Marine Corps can trace its illustrious history back to 1775 when the Continental Congress decreed "two battalions of Marines be raised." Tales of Tun Tavern and the New Providence Raid are passed on to each new generation of Marines at Parris Island and San Diego. Beyond the glamorization and hype attached to all military unit histories, what was the Continental Marine Corps like and what was its significance?

Among the ranks of the newly formed Marines only a few were native-born Americans. In fact, during some operations entire attachments of Marines were enlisted from European nations. The men (and maybe a woman or two) who made up the Continental Corps were advanced one month's pay ($6.66 for a Private) upon enlistment. Recruiting was usually conducted in taverns, hence the famous Tun Tavern: "the first Marine Corps recruiting office." "Recruiting officers" were provided money and sent out looking for volunteers. Since life was considerably more difficult at sea than ashore, and Marines/Sailors were paid the same as soldiers, procurement of the best recruits was not always possible. Enlistments usually ran for a year, at which time the Marine normally departed service. Major Samuel Nicholas, the senior Marine Corps officer or Commandant of the Marine Corps, departed service several times during the war.

Patterned after their counterpart in England, the Royal Marines, the Continental Marines were tasked in combat aboard ship to act as snipers to pick off enemy officers and gun crews, to defend against boarding parties and to fill in as replacements for gun crew casualties. Also, Marines were to accompany landing parties ashore. When not in combat, Marines were to enforce ships rules and, more importantly, protect the ship's officers in times of mutiny. During the American Revolution however, sea pay was the share of the bounty received from captured vessels.

The center of Marine Corps activity was Philadelphia. Major Nicholas's control over anything he could not see was minimal. With logistics and communication poor at best and the nation's strategy of commerce raiding, Marines had few chances for major engagements with the British. As the assets of the Continental Navy slowly dwindled, so did the Marine Corps. By 1783, the Navy had but two frigates and enough crew to man only one of them. With the discharge of Lieutenant Thomas Elwood in September of 1783, the Marine Corps ceased to exist.

Restricted as it was, the Continental Marine Corps contributed its share to the cause of independence. Marines were involved in every major naval engagement and of the estimated 2,231 enlisted and officers serving in the Marine Corps, approximately 49 were killed in action with another 70 wounded. Marines protecting naval ships and providing infantry expertise proved that there was a niche for "Soldiers of the Sea." If nothing else, the Continental Marines began the glorious tradition of the most elite fighting force in the world.

Summer brings threat of ticks

Cpl. Edward S. Harcher
Globe staff

A hidden danger may be lurking amid the grass and leaves of your favorite picnic or bivouac area. At a glance, nothing may seem amiss, but upon closer examination, there they are—ticks.

In contrast to their diminutive appearance, the dangers posed by ticks and other parasitic insects are no small matter. Several diseases can be transmitted by ticks burrowing into the skin of their unknowing victims.

The most common tick-borne diseases in the Camp Lejeune area are Rocky Mountain Spotted Fever and Lyme Disease, according to HM2 Gregorio Galindo, Preventive Medicine technician, Epidemiology. Of these, Lyme Disease presents the most danger.

Lyme Disease is caused by a spirochete bacteria, Borrelia burgdorferi, carried mainly by Deer ticks, Galindo said. It is transmitted when a tick carrying the bacteria attaches itself to a host.

The initial symptoms of Lyme Disease, a rash with circular rings and flu-like ailments, appear after the incubation period of the bacteria — three to 32 days after the tick has attached itself, Galindo said.

"Most people that come in for Lyme disease treatment were alerted by the appearance of the 'bullseye effect' the rash presents," he added, referring to the ringed rash pattern surrounding the bite.

A series of oral antibiotics can be used for treatment during early stages of the disease. Penicillin and tetracycline derivatives are cited as the most common and effective antibiotics for treatment.

"We most often prescribe doxycycline (a penicillin derivative) tablets to kill the bacteria unless the victim is allergic to penicillin," Galindo said. "It works pretty well to kill the organism, and it is fairly inexpensive."

Later symptoms include headache, fever, stiff neck and other flu-like conditions.

The treatment for later stages follows the same procedure as in earlier stages, Galindo said.

"When late-stage symptoms are reported, we perform a blood test for the bacteria's pres-possibly be tick-infested." For field training missions, insect repellent is available for skin and clothing treatment through the supply system.

• Wear long-sleeved shirts and long trousers when camping, and keep sleeves rolled down when in field training. When possible, wear light colored clothes to make spotting ticks easier before they become attached.

• Inspect yourself, children and pets when returning from wooded areas. Ticks attach themselves in snug, protected areas such as near the beltline or ankles. On pets, the ears and collar area are prime hiding spots.

• Don't attempt to smother or burn out ticks, they will attempt to burrow deeper into the skin and make removal more difficult. Remove ticks promptly using tweezers or forceps, when possible. Grasp the tick at the head and pull firmly and slowly out. Wash the area with soap and water.

Galindo also recommends humane removal of any rodent pests.

"Don't kill mice or rats that find their way into your house," he said. "When they die, any ticks they may have been carrying fall off and begin the search for new hosts."

Humane trapping methods keep the rodents alive, therefore their tick passengers stay attached and away from you. Remove any trapped rodents to a location far from housing units.

Preventive measures will help reduce the chance of tick bites, but there is no way of eliminating that possibility entirely.

If you are bitten by ticks and suspect Lyme Disease infection, go to your Battalion Aid Station.

Sickle Cell: E. North Carolina Chapter wages war against d

Cpl. Joseph B. Gray III

When a disabling disease or illness plagues an individual, it can create all sorts of physical problems for the victim as well as mental and social complications for him and his family.

Every year new-born infants are diagnosed with sickle cell disease with the African-American population suffering more sickle cell victims than any other group of people.

However, in coastal North Carolina, the Sickle Cell Disease Association of America, Inc. — Eastern North Carolina Chapter goes to work everyday battling the illness and aiding its victims. According to Marcia M. Wright, executive director of the Eastern North Carolina Chapter, they wage their medical war in a variety of ways.

"We provide education in public schools, genetic counseling, financial aid, a scholarship program, summer camp as well as housing, clothes and food," Wright said.

Sickle cell disease is an inherited blood disease that attacks the hemoglobin, the oxygen carrying pigment, in a person's red blood cells. This can cause the usually round blood cells to turn sickle shaped, reducing the oxygen flow to the body. The sickle-shaped cells can also restrict blood flow in the smaller vessels causing pains known as "sickle cell crises."

"It's like having a fire; without the oxygen the fire won't burn. Without red blood cells carrying the sufficient amount of oxygen, the body won't work properly," Wright said.

"Individuals suffering from sickle cell disease have a lower resistance to illness and can also suffer tissue damage over long periods of time. Unfortunately, we can treat some of the symptoms, but there is no cure for sickle cell disease or sickle cell anemia," Wright said.

She added that new-born infants are screened for sickle cell disease, and they are put on penicillin if they are diagnosed with the disorder.

Wright said she has heard of people receiving bone marrow transplants for sickle cell disease, but she believes that operation should be used as a last resort. People can be diagnosed with cell trait, but this doesn't always mean sickle cell disease.

"We can't do testing for the disease at the office, but individuals can get tested at a hospital," Wright said. "We can then bring in the results, and explain to them what the results mean through genetic counseling."

The Eastern North Carolina Chapter makes specialized care for sickle cell disease patients available by working with the five major medical centers in the state.

They also can provide transportation for individuals who need it for medical sessions and special events held at the chapter.

Wright said the chapter's primary mission is helping people diagnosed with sickle cell disease, but they also offer assistance to families dealing with the problem of a sick child.

"We counsel parents who are having a rough time dealing with having the disease," Wright said. "We also help them deal with their children who might feel jealous because of the child with sickle cell disease receiving much attention. The chapter can help relatives of the individual learn how to deal with other problems that may arise."

The Sickle Cell Association of America receives some funding through the United Federal Campaign fund drive. The Eastern North Carolina Chapter has a contract with the North Carolina Department of State Medical Department to raise additional money through local fundraisers.

"Our participation in fund drives is usually pretty good," Wright said. "The public is very supportive of the program we have."

September is National Sickle Cell Month, but the Eastern North Carolina Chapter runs projects and helps around the year.

For people needing help or wishing to help the chapter fight this disease, contact the Eastern North Carolina Chapter at (910) 346-2510 or visit it at 825 Gum Branch Road, Suite 119.

Lejeune volunteers make DA camp a special time

Scott J. Metzner

Muscular Dystrophy Association of Eastern North Carolina sponsors a week-long summer camp every year for children between the ages of 6 and 21 with neuromuscular diseases. This year's camp was held recently at Camp Lejeune in Parris, N.C.

Lejeune Marines and Sailors have provided a special time for the campers. Volunteers serve as attendants at the camp for 11 years, according to Emily Houser, MDA camp coordinator.

"The volunteers from Camp Lejeune are extraordinary," Houser said. "They work so hard to make the camp a good place for these kids."

To the nature of the camp, MDA strives to ensure each camper has their own attendant, Houser explained.

Cpl. Michael S. Maki, left, CSSD-23, and Sgt. Gerber Stevens, 8th Comm. Bn. hold an oversized sling shot, as a camper pulls it back to fire a water balloon.

MDA provides a mandatory orientation and training on the first day for all volunteers, said Houser. A camp staff is also on hand at all times to ensure proper care, she added.

During the first couple days of camp, counselors are faced with the challenge of getting the campers to come out of their shells," according to Sgt. Gerber Stevens, a satellite repair technician, Service Co., 8th Comm. Bn. FSSG.

"I've volunteered for this camp for five years now, and year after year you have to gain the campers' trust," he said. "More than this camp, most of these kids are cared for by their parents. They're not used to strange people being around, much less relying on a stranger to care for all of their needs. It takes a lot of acting silly like a kid to show them you're a person just like they are and that you really do care."

Many organized events are held throughout the week to bring out the spirit of competitiveness among the campers.

"We break the campers into groups for most of the activities," Stevens said. "Competition makes them look to each other and their counselors for support. Team work is emphasized throughout their week here."

In addition to organized athletics, campers are given responsibilities such as daily clean-ups and duties.

"The campers have jobs that they get paid 'camp money' for doing," said Stevens. "It not only gives them a sense of accomplishment, but it also adds a unique twist to the camp. We gave them jobs as camp policemen, firemen and lawyers. They were able to spend the money they earned at the Casino Night we had. Then we had 'thieves' rob the bank. The following night we had a mock trial to try and find the guilty party. It was a lot of fun."

Other events during the camp included a Karaoke Night, an auction where, again, earned money could be used, archery, firing BB guns and arts and crafts.

"These kids like to do the exact same things that you or I would like to do," Stevens said. "A lot of people think they're different because of a wheel chair, but they're not. They just want to have fun."

Both the counselors and campers had a great time throughout their week together at camp, said Cpl. Michael S. Maki, CSSD-23, 2d FSSG, MCAS Beaufort, S.C. However, the counselors left camp with another warm feeling inside—a rewarding feeling.

"A lot of these kids are really limited as to what they can do actively," he said. "Being there for them, and seeing the smiles on their faces is so great. This camp means so much to them. It gives them a chance to interact with other kids and have a lot of fun. I really enjoyed it, and I'll definitely be back next year."

Superintendent returns to improve Lejeune District

Cpl. Jason C. Huffine
Globe staff

Dr. James Pirkle, superintendent of Camp Lejeune Dependent Schools, recently returned to the classroom to expand his leadership and managerial skills through the Superintendent's Executive Program at the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill.

The program is North Carolina-wide and gives representatives from throughout the state an opportunity to see what other school districts are offering in their emphasis on education.

There were schools from large cities represented, small cities and of course federal, which Camp Lejeune falls under, said Pirkle.

"I was among 30 participants selected to attend the UNC-CH program for superintendents and assistant and associate superintendents," Pirkle said.

"The high-intensity and rigorous 24-day program, designed to make educators more effective school system leaders, was a real challenge, one of those professional staff development opportunities that improves one's individual skills."

The course required participants to complete 160 hours of classroom work over its seven month duration, continued Pirkle. "There were many areas of studies that participants had to take part in," he said.

"Law, curriculum, personal management and communications were just a few tasked for development."

There were other tasks assigned by the program's faculty members, besides the basic areas of study, added Pirkle.

"The participants had to discuss and study 10 books, read approximately 70 articles, evaluate seven or more case studies and had over 40 home work assignments," Pirkle said.

Also, there was a paper written by each participant discussing educational philosophy and long-term goals to improve one's aspect of their school district, said Pirkle.

When addressing the subject of educational philosophy, it must be compared with a collection of marbles, according to Pirkle.

"A collection of marbles can be broken down to individuals, each representing a different color or in this case situation: the best school facilities, the best teachers, the best materials, the best administrators, the best school lunch program and the best of all components," Pirkle said.

"When put together into a collection, each marble contributes toward the education of the whole child, the ultimate goal," he said.

Planning is one aspect that needs to be addressed for improvement in Camp Lejeune's schools, Pirkle added.

"I would like to develop a system wide, strategic plan that meets the needs of our Camp Lejeune community and students," he said.

"The system would have to embrace the national educational goals, one of the Department of Defense' responsibilities that they are required to address."

The opportunity for someone to participate in the program has given our community's schools the information needed to remain an up to date school, Pirkle said.

"In the entire arena of being a superintendent of schools, it helps remind an individual of the students' needs," he said.

"The opportunity I was given has not been forgotten, and hopefully my accomplishments can produce a positive outcome on Camp Lejeune Schools and students," he concluded.

SOI: Working hard to make infantrymen for tomorrow

Cpl. Lance M. Bacon

Globe staff

A tour of duty on the drill field or with a Marine Expeditionary Unit is commonly synonymous with stress, grueling hours and a high operational tempo.

At Camp Geiger there is a group who, unknown to many, regularly combine the stress and hours of the drill field with the operational tempo of a MEU — the School of Infantry's squad leaders/instructors.

Though these Marines don't deploy as a MEU does, they spend countless hours taking basic Marines recently out of boot camp and molding them into infantrymen ready for service in a Fleet Marine Force unit.

"Every Marine may be a rifleman, but not every Marine is an 0311," said Sgt. William Bodette, Company C, SOI. "Not every Marine is an infantryman — I know, because I make them."

But creating tomorrow's warriors doesn't come without a price to the squad leaders/instructors. They have 44 training days to transform the Marines into infantrymen, only to pick up a new class days after a company's graduation.

And with each company comes countless hours of field exercises, weaponry training, tactical instruction and miles of humping and patrolling.

"You get used to the physical aspects, but the lack of sleep is something you never get used to," said Sgt. Dave E. Gustavson, an 0351 instructor with Co. C, SOI. "We put in about 70 hours a week. I've put in as much as 130 hours in a week. The stress level is higher here than anywhere."

"This week I've averaged about three hours of sleep a night," Bodette added. "Sometimes it's more, sometimes it's less, but the job has to be done. In a short time these Marines could be on a helicopter headed for a hot landing zone, so we have to ensure they receive the best training possible."

But providing that level of training isn't for everyone, Bodette warned.

"If you're looking to be a tough guy and head home early, this is not the place to come," he said. "If you don't want to hang and bang in the bush, don't come over here. You'll have a lot of problems, and the squad leaders will have a lot of problems with you. The best sergeants I've seen in my life work out here, and we take a lot of pride in being 0311s and making 0311s. We're out getting soaked and sleeping in the field four and five nights a week. We're not teaching them to drill or how to wear their uniforms; we're teaching them how to go into combat. There's no job with a greater responsibility, and it is our obligation to give 100 percent to meet that responsibility."

Unfortunately, meeting that responsibility has a price beyond the physical demands for many of the squad leaders, according to Bodette.

"Some families can handle it, but many can't," Bodette said. "Fortunately, my wife has found ways to handle it and be supportive. She's comfortable knowing that I'll not have the long deployments I had in the fleet, and she's happy seeing me enjoy my job, but it still has its difficulties. She asked me if I had grown a mustache when we talked on the phone the other day. That's how little I've seen her."

In addition to the stress on the family life, many instructors wish they could add more to the training, according to Bodette.

"I'd like to be able to train them in certain ways I was trained," Bodette said. "They receive more technical training than I did coming through SOI, there's no doubt about it, but the level of stress they face is far shorter. They need to know how to react in a stressful environment. That doesn't mean it needs to be a dangerous or abusive environment, but they're not going to work at Bob's Big Boy when they leave here. They'll be going across the river to a unit who may be deployed and throwing rounds down range in the future, and these Marines have to be ready for that."

"You see Marines come through who you know will do good in the fleet, and it's rewarding to help them get there, but the bottom line is that the caliber of Marines across the river is a hell of a lot higher," Gustavson added.

"(The students) are not restricted like recruits — we put responsibility in their hands, but we also have to keep constant supervision," he said. "If things start going wrong then we have to take over instead of guiding them or letting them learn through experience. As a result, if things get too hard on them some will back out, and that's something you'll not see a Marine doing in a fleet unit."

With the continually high operational tempo faced by units, the squad leaders/instructors continue to do all they can to provide a high-quality infantryman to the fleet.

"We're very proud of the product we put out," Bodette said. "We'd like to make them a little harder and more able to react in a stressful environment, but that will come to them in the fleet. I know we're putting some quality infantrymen out there. To do so, we freeze in the winter and bake in the summer, and often face-off against mosquitoes big enough to carry you away, but I wouldn't trade my job for anything. Seeing them leave here as better Marines than they were when they came makes it all worth while."

Fort Sumter: The spark that began the Civil War

Cpl. Lance M. Bacon

Globe staff

Winston Churchill once described the United States and England as "two countries separated by a common language." One aspect of the two are not separated on, however, is in recognizing the benefits of military lessons learned throughout history.

Second Air/Naval Gunfire Liaison Company, 2d Surveillance, Reconnaissance and Intelligence Group, and 41 members of 148th Commando Forward Observation Battery, 29th Commando Regiment, British Army took time out from their intense Burmese Chas '95 exercise to reflect on such a piece of American combat history during an on-site battle study of Fort Sumter — a strategic island fort located in South Carolina's Charleston Harbor.

"It was an outstanding evolution. Everyone had an enjoyable and educational time," said Capt. Steve Nitzschke, 2d Brigade Platoon commander, 2d ANGLICO.

During the month-long exercise, now in its ninth year, the alternating host country implements an opportunity for the units to study past military events and further their knowledge of the respective country, according to Nitzschke.

(Fort Sumter) is in close proximity and offers a great range of history in not only the battle, but in the town itself," he said. "In addition to learning about American history and culture during the time of the Civil War, we also focused on the military aspects of the battle from a supporting arms and naval gunfire perspective."

For the Marines and their British counterparts, who are capable of calling in a wide array of such supporting arms and naval gunfire, the measures used at Sumter may seem crude, but were nonetheless effective.

Erecting a 10-inch Columbiad cannon, the United States garrison on Fort Sumter found the same benefit of supporting arms that could be sought by one of the British or Marine forward observers studying the battle some 134 years later.

But beyond the supporting arms methods used by both forces in the drive for victory, the entire battle offers a hauntingly familiar lesson in warfare from which leaders can still learn today.

During the latter months of 1860, growing tensions over slavery continued to divide the nation. What had once been a matter voiced in opinion by common citizens had become a platform on which every politician and businessman stood.

While the abolitionists condemned slavery as inhumane and unjust, southerners proclaimed their economy would crumble without it, and quickly accused the opportunistic northerners using indentured servants as a form of slavery.

Eventually, a secession of Southern states from the Union began. The seventh state to do so was South Carolina on Dec. 20, 1860.

Twelve days before the secession, South Carolinian representatives in Congress declared that in the event of a secession, the State would not in any way attack or harass the three Charleston Harbor forts belonging to the United States without first making an effort to reach a peaceful, amicable settlement. One of the stipulations of the implied agreement was that no reinforcements be sent and the military status of the forts remain unchanged.

The three forts in question were Fort Moultrie on Sullivan's Island, Fort Johnson on James Island and Fort Sumter, located on a small island in the middle of the bay. Of the three, only Fort Moultrie was manned, containing a garrison of about 150, of which 129 were actual armed soldiers while the rest were wives and children of some officers.

On December 26, six days after South Carolina's secession, the garrison, commanded by Maj. Robert Anderson of the 1st Artillery, secretly moved under the cover of darkness to the stronger and safer Fort Sumter. While doing so, the garrison left Fort Moultrie as unusable as possible, destroying gun positions and fortifications.

South Carolina, having already dispatched a negotiating team to Washington to discuss the situation, saw the act as a violation. They immediately manned Forts Johnson and Moultrie and set their sights on Fort Sumter.

Thousands of armed Confederates filled the streets of Charleston, and began erecting positions along the harbor. Beyond the violation of Anderson and his garrison, the harbor itself was vital to the Confederate cause and a Union attack was expected.

Meanwhile, the 129 men of Fort Sumter began readying themselves for conflict. They made final preparations to gun positions and strengthened fortifications. The garrison had well surpassed the Confederate soldiers in readiness, as they were still in the beginning phases of setting up many positions. The men of Fort Sumter were confident that if they were allowed to unleash an attack on the uncompleted positions that they could effectively quell any Confederate offensive for quite some time.

Instead, politicians continued to fight a war of words and policies. The garrison was ordered to make no aggressive moves, but were allowed to defend themselves if necessary.

As a result, Confederate strength continued to grow in the area. On January 9, an attempt to resupply and reinforce Fort Sumter was intercepted by the Confederates. Early that morning, the steamer Star of the West was halted at the harbor's mouth. When the ship's command refused to succumb to the orders to turn back, Confederate artillerymen fired upon the vessel, forcing it back to sea along with the supplies and reinforcements it carried.

The event had a massive motivational effect on the South Carolinians, who continued to strengthen their forces.

On February 1, Maj. Anderson sent all wives and children from the fort. Charleston accepted them at once, putting them aboard a steamer headed for New York.

Soon after their departure, the garrison received Anderson's approval to test the alignment and trajectory of a 10-inch Columbiad cannon they had mounted as a mortar. Using a two-pound charge of gun powder vice the regular 18-pound charge, the men loaded the crude mortar with an inert shell.

They expected the shell to go perhaps 1,000 yards, so no danger was anticipated since the bay was clear of traffic. Much to their dismay, the garrison quickly learned that two pounds was a considerable charge when using the cannon as a mortar. The projectile soared toward Charleston and the moored vessels on the shoreline.

It fell short of both, but landed near a secessionist guard boat. So as to not ignite any unauthorized conflict, the garrison held no more mortar experiments. But with the one, the Confederates had learned that Fort Sumter had at least one formidable mortar, and the garrison had learned that Charleston was well within their range.

For the following two months, politics continued to leave Fort Sumter in the hands of fate. Jefferson Davis was inaugurated by the Confederacy on February 18, and amid rumors of assassination, Abraham Lincoln was inaugurated by the United States on March 4. All the while, military preparations and strategic planning continued.

By early April, Fort Sumter was surrounded by Confederate troops and artillery. Commanding the Southern forces was BGen. Pierre Gustave Toutant Beauregard — a Louisianian of French lineage who received brevet promotions to captain and major during the Mexican War.

Beauregard had graduated second from his class at West Point, where his artillery instructor at West Point had been none other than Anderson. In either a tragic twist of fate or in-depth planning by the Confederacy, the commander of the besieging force was privy to all of the defender's tactics and strategies.

On April 11, Beauregard sent Col. James Chesnut and Capt. S.D. Lee to Fort Sumter under a white flag. They delivered a message from their commander, which again stated that the Confederacy would participate in no hostile acts if the Union would voluntarily evacuate. In Fort Johnson, and the darkness pierced by the shell's explosion directly above Fort Sumter. What followed was a massive barrage of Confederate artillery on the island fort. After years of debate and the breakdown of a nation, an inevitable war had started.

Explosions flashed from all sides as shells were launched at Sumter, yet the garrison still didn't fire. Instead, the men waited in bomb shelters. By daybreak, the garrison was enjoying breakfast in the mess hall, amid the continuous Confederate fire.

After finishing their meal, Doubleday led his company to the guns aimed at Cumming's Point. From there, 13-inch iron mortars and 10-inch cannons continued to hurl shells at the fort. The garrison battery aimed on their target and, upon Doubleday's order, fired the first shot against the Confederates.

Fire from throughout Fort Sumter became regular, and was regularly answered by the Confederacy.

Still, four hours later there was little damage to Fort Sumter or the Confederate positions. Heavy fortifications had proved worthy, as even direct strikes resulted in little consequence. Nevertheless, each strike chipped away at the fortification's strength. While Sumter stood alone, Confederate positions were mounted on four of its five sides, leaving only the open sea without an enemy position. Each of those positions were heavily supplied and easily reinforced, making it only a matter of time before Sumter would collapse.

Though Charleston was within firing range, Anderson chose not to fire upon it since many noncombatants had gathered to watch the tremendous battle. In addition, Anderson ordered that only batteries with brick proedge. The timing was near perfect, as a scarcity of primers and cartridge bags (individual powder bags) had left the garrison using make-shift bags and their place. But as they approached, a shell struck the fort's flagstaff, resulting in the flag jamming mast — a signal of distress to the fleet. With signaling that this was not so, the fort watch fleet remained off the bar.

The firing continued throughout the day, with significant results for either force. Though the Confederates had all but destroyed the exposure of the fort, the brick fortifications housing the and their weapons remained unscathed. Heated tiles had also set fires throughout Sumter, but quickly extinguished. At nightfall, Sumter's garrison halted their firing, while the Confederates limited 15 minute intervals.

The next day, the firing picked up where it had. Throughout the course of the day, however, Confederate fire became more intense while Union fire became sporadic. Beauregard had every intention of ending battle quickly, but the fort showed no signs of yielding.

Fires began to erupt and spread throughout. One had progressed to a magazine, where men braved the flames and smoke to retrieve the shell within. Though the battle was obviously unwinnable, a man on the fort was ready to surrender his position if he still had the means to fight.

As the battle ensued, the Confederate soldiers to admire the courage and gallantry of the Fort garrison. Despite receiving continuous fire from sides, while they had to fire in four directions supplies diminished, the garrison continued to stand ground and defend their battered fort. That won admiration of the Confederates, who cheered with each fired by the garrison, and scorned the fleet for not giving their courageous countrymen.

As the fire engulfed more of the fort, all powder was unable to be protected from the flames had been thrown into the depths below. Because it was low, some of the powder landed short of the water, in front of an embrasure. The Confederates saw what happened and aimed on the point, subsequently blowing the gun positioned there completely out of the bay.

By 11 a.m., one-fifth of the fort was aflame. What was more disastrous, though, was that the wind coming the bay had wrapped the fort in smoke, and many men were on the verge of suffocation.

As each man struggled for air, no firing was done by the garrison. Confederate soldiers began cheering, and the battle looked to be over, but their cheers were premature. A shift in the wind brought the garrison enough oxygen to regain their posture and, under order of Doubleday, back at the Confederate positions.

At 12:48 p.m., the fort's flagstaff was shot down. A triumphant shout filled the air as the flag fell into fiery remnants below, the Union Navy remained on the bar, unwilling to take on the bay's artillery position and aid their all but defeated allies.

Unknown to Beauregard, Col. Louis T. Wigfall took upon himself to leave Morris Island and speak to Anderson after witnessing his colors fall. As he headed for the fort, however, the flag again rose — this time affixed to a board and secured by the fort's jagged remains.

Still, Wigfall continued on. He had tied a white handkerchief to his sword, but the sign of truce was unable to be seen at that distance. As his boat approached the fort, it was fired upon twice, both shots nearly destroying the tiny vessel.

The crew had no choice but to quickly reach the island fort, where Wigfall dismounted in an effort to locate Anderson. When he had, he commended Anderson's gallantry in defending the fort, but asked for an unconditional surrender with full military honors. With diminishing supplies and resupply unattainable for the battered fort, Anderson agreed, and a white flag was raised.

As Wigfall left the fort, another Confederate group approached. The group, led by Stephen Lee, Beauregard's aide, reached the fort and met with Anderson. The meeting was confusing to the garrison commander, who just met the terms of Wigfall and didn't understand the necessity of a second meeting.

Lee in turn expressed that, though an aide-de-camp, Beauregard, Wigfall did not act with the authority of a general and the terms he had expressed were therefore void. With that said, Anderson declared that he would again run up his flag and open fire on the Confederates since the terms he had agreed on would not be met.

Lee's team was able to persuade Anderson to accept the terms he had agreed upon, which they would in turn deliver to Beauregard. As the garrison commander was doing so, Maj. D.R. Jones, assistant adjutant-general, arrived from Charleston. On behalf of Gen. Beauregard, he presented the same terms offered by the Confederates on April 11 and by Wigfall, to which Anderson agreed.

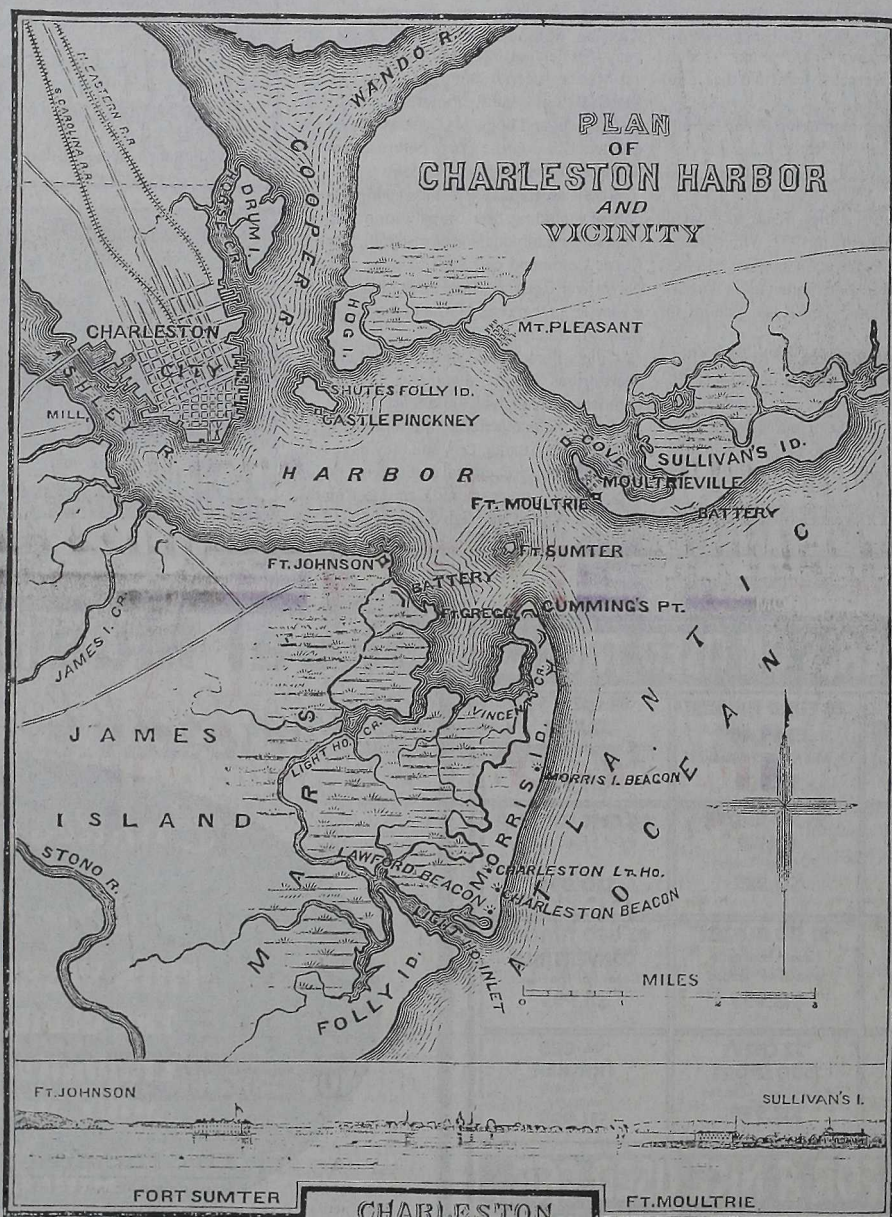

Fort Sumter was surrendered April 13, 1861. Much to the delight of both forces, no casualties or serious injuries had resulted despite the thousands of accurate shells fired during the 40-hour battle. Though Confederate positions bore damage and Fort Sumter was all but destroyed, every man walked away from the battle.

After a much-needed night of sleep, the Union garrison woke the morning of April 14th to board the Isabel — a transport offered by the Confederates. While firing an intended 100-gun salute to the flag, fire flakes entered the cannon tube and, upon ramming a cartridge into the cannon, a subsequent explosion took the life of a young private and seriously wounded five others.

All efforts of compromise were abandoned with the surrender of Fort Sumter, as President Lincoln ordered a naval blockade of all Southern ports. Shortly thereafter, Arkansas, North Carolina, Virginia and Tennessee joined the Confederacy, and Richmond, Va., was made the capital of the Confederate States of America.

In later years, Fort Sumter was twice attacked, without success, by Union forces in 1863. Then, in 1865, the Confederates released their hold of the fort as Gen. William T. Sherman's Union army approached.

During the years that followed the battle for Fort Sumter, an estimated 620,000 lives were lost in the four-year war — more than any other in American history.

Beauregard's message, however, he warned that the Confederate Government could no longer delay in gaining possession of the strategic fortification.

Anderson refused to surrender his post, but added that he and his men would be starved out in a matter of days. Beauregard sent the message to the Confederate Secretary of War, L.P. Walker, who looked to keep the fort as intact as possible. He ordered that if Anderson would relate a time in which he would evacuate and that he would not fire upon the Confederate soldiers, then the situation would end without bloodshed.

Receiving the decree in the early morning of April 12, Anderson agreed and indicated that the garrison would depart the fort on April 15, unless they received supplies or were otherwise ordered by the United States Government. However, Anderson could not agree to not fire upon Confederate soldiers, explaining his requirement to protect his flag against any hostile act.

The answers were not to the liking of Beauregard. When the aides received Anderson's response at 3:45 a.m., while still aboard the fort, they notified Anderson that Beauregard would order his artillery batteries to open fire in one hour.

Escorting the aides to their boat, Anderson shook their hands, saying "If we never meet in this world again, God grant that we may meet in the next." Realizing what was about to come, he left the men to wake his second in command, Capt. Abner Doubleday.

Both forces sat in the dark silence. Months of preparation culminated on the acts of two men; Anderson, who was readying his forces, and Beauregard, who was allowing his opponent one last hour to change his stance.

At 4:30 a.m., the silence was broken by mortar fire from tection were to be used. The move was intended to save the lives of his men, but many of the men were dismayed by the choice. The batteries protected by brick fired only solid shot, while the batteries atop the fort's walls housed the shell guns — weapons which could have set fire to the enemy positions. The same type of weapons the Confederates were now firing on Sumter with.

The order was more than some garrison members could bear. On the Morris Island side of the fort, two sergeants secretly climbed to an already loaded and aimed 10-inch Columbiad. They fired upon the battery at Cumming's Point, grazing the position with the slightly high shot. The Confederate battery turned their guns to the origin of the nearly-fatal shot, determined to rip the gun and its crew from the wall.

Meanwhile, the sergeants reloaded the gun. Though their aim was just slightly off, to return the massive weapon to its firing point was near impossible for two men. As a result, the men decided to fire it as it stood.

One sergeant returned downstairs to again see if any officers were near. The second remained with the gun, slightly lowering the elevation and laying on the floor with lanyard in hand. As the initial rounds were shot by the Cumming's Point battery, the sergeant, realizing he was laying on an entire battery's primary target, pulled the lanyard. The recoil sent the huge cannon into a somersault, crashing onto the staircase.

The sergeants, knowing what would happen if they were found to have disobeyed a direct order, quickly returned to their assigned position. Unknown to them, the second shot had struck just under the middle embrasure of the battery, half-burying it in sand.

By noon, Union relief vessels appeared at the bay's

30th Commandant gets last hair cut from barber who gave him his first Thirty-seven years ago, a young second lieutenant sat down in Dan Williford's barber chair to receive his first haircut since being assigned to the Fleet Marine Force. On June 28, 37 years later, that Marine returned for his final active duty haircut. It was not a gold bar that adorned his collar this time, however. Instead, it was the four stars of Gen. Carl E. Mundy Jr., Commandant of the Marine Corps.

General Mundy was on his final visit to Camp Lejeune before retiring when he sat down in Williford's chair for his final haircut. In 1958, then 2dLt. Mundy paid Williford a visit the night before reporting into the 2d Marine Division the next morning. The 30th Commandant returned June 28 so that he could retire from the Marine Corps with a "Williford Special."

"It's quite an honor to have him ask me to give him his last haircut," Williford said. "He is one of the finest gentlemen I have ever known. He was a nice guy when he was a lieutenant and has only gotten better through the years."

But cutting the hair of legendary and historical Marines is nothing new to Williford. Since becoming a barber at the Camp Lejeune Officer's Club in April 1955, the likes of Gen. Leonard F. Chapman Jr., 24th Commandant; Gen. Robert E. Cushman Jr., 25th Commandant and Gen. Alfred M. Gray, 29th Commandant have sat in his chair.

In addition to the many Commandants, LtGen. Lewis B. "Chesty" Puller frequented the shop for shaves as well as haircuts, Williford said.

While society and the Marine Corps has changed considerably since those first years when Williford was giving $.75 haircuts, the haircuts and the Marines haven't.

"There's really no difference in how the Marines like to wear their hair," he said. "Flat tops used to be very popular. They're still somewhat popular, but not as popular. The Marines haven't changed that much, either. I've met many good people over the years. The amount of people I have met and didn't like I could probably count on one hand and still have one or two fingers left."

Williford said he plans to work for a couple more years, then looks to hang up his clippers and retire in the area with his family.

ASP provides storage for vital ammunition

Sgt. Steven G. Steele
Globe Staff

The mission of a Marine rifle squad is "To locate, close with and destroy the enemy by fire and maneuver, and to repel the enemy's assault by fire and close combat." One of the key words is "fire," and without ammunition, there couldn't be any firing.

Camp Lejeune's Ammunition Supply Point provides that ammunition, according to Capt. Everette G. Brown, officer-in-charge, Ammunition Supply Point.

"The overall mission of the ASP is to supply all the ammo for the II Marine Expeditionary Force units and all the training units aboard Camp Lejeune," Brown said. Additionally we maintain a pre-war reserve stockpile in case the MEF is called to war."

Camp Lejeune's ASP is located on Snead's Ferry Road between Main Service Road and Marine's Road. It covers over 235.5 acres of land, and is the largest Marine ammunition supply point on the east coast. It has 69 different storage magazines connected by approximately 5.2 miles of road.

Marines of Ammunition Company, 2d Supply Battalion, 2d Force Service Support Group provide most of the work force, but there are a few key civilian employees at the site. The compound is protected by an intrusion detection system, and it has its own security and reaction force, according to Mr. Richard M. Johnson, general foreman and assistant officer-in-charge.

There are between 45 and 60 Marines working in the compound on any given day, though there are more in Ammunition Co.

"Ammunition Co. has a little over 200 people (in it)," Johnson said. "But because

Sgt. Steven G. Steele

These earth-covered magazines are some of the most secure, and are used to house some of the more explosive types of ammunition. Camp Lejeune's Ammunition Supply Point has different types of magazines for storing ammunition. Factors such as compatibility, safety and security determine which rounds are stored in which magazine.

of deployments outside the area and other activities, we don't have that many people physically here. We also have a cadre of civilian employees in case Marines should unexpectedly be called away. If that happens, we also have about 20 civilians around the base earmarked to come over and man the ASP until back-up forces come aboard."

The ASP's daily activities revolve mainly around issuing ammo to the using units. In the month of May over 240 tons of ammunition were processed through the ASP, which Brown said is a typical month.

"We maintain an inventory worth about $40 million," said Mr. Don Durrett, supervisor supply technician. "The cost of the rounds ranges in price from 1 cent to more than $50,000. The dollar value of the ASP's daily issue depends on the units drawing the ammo. Obviously an artillery unit's draw would cost more than a unit drawing only small arms ammo."

The ASP also distributes ammo to other bases. "Any ammo shipped from our ASP to any place other than a unit training locally is handled by our package section," Johnson said. "They prepare it for over-the-road, sea or air shipment depending on the required mode of transportation needed for it to reach its final destination anywhere in the world."

With all the various types of ammunition in the Marine Corps' inventory, Johnson stated you could never learn everything because it's always changing. That is reflected by the diversity of their billets.

"The ammunition field is one of the most diverse fields in the Marine Corps," Johnson said. "A Marine graduating from the Basic Ammo Course at Redstone Arsenal in Huntsville, Ala., then going to an ASP will have a whole different set of responsibilities. There are also several liaison billets for ammo techs located all over the world."

Whether it's an artillery unit needing 155mm high-explosive rounds, or an infantry company drawing 5.56mm rounds, Camp Lejeune's Ammunition Supply Point is providing support and issuing the rounds that prohibits the saying "I'm not becoming..." "Every Marine a bayoneter."

Technology expo previews future

Local businessmen display advanced data processing equipment to Lejeune Marines

The Camp Lejeune Staff Noncommissioned Officers club was recently invaded by a small group of businessmen armed with an array of advanced information processing equipment.

Their mission: to introduce the personnel of Camp Lejeune to the future of computer technology.

The group from National Small Business Council, Inc. was sponsored by the Management Support Division to set up an exposition "to provide a convenient forum to update base personnel with the latest technologies," said John F. Skipper, executive vice president, NSBC.

"We produce these events all over the country for the Department of Defense," Skipper said, "but it is the first time we've held an exposition aboard Lejeune."

Early in the morning June 27, Skipper and his staff transformed the Huff Room of the SNCO club into a showroom for information systems and their peripheral equipment.

Interested attendees viewed systems which varied from laptop and portable touchscreens up to minicomputers and digital scanning equipment.

A major accessory common to most of the displays was the PCMCIA bus port computer. Through the PCMCIA, peripheral devices such as modem, Local Area Network (LAN), additional drives and even wireless data transmission devices can be quickly attached and removed through an easily accessible card-sized port on the front of the computer.

Not all of the products displayed are on the horizon.

One of the booths was devoted to Automated Identification Technology (AIT), and equipment displayed there is in use today in supply systems and in deployment and logistics operations, according to Mark Coburn, technical consultant with the Intermedia Corporation.

As the attendees worked their way around the room, the success of the exposition was obvious.

The Marines, Sailors and Department of Defense civilians crowded around the displays asking myriad questions about the applications and new developments in the particular areas of interest. The operators of the booths answered their questions cordially in a professional manner. Information packets about the equipment were also available at most of the displays.

The event was open to all interested servicemembers and DoD employees between 10:00 a.m. and 2:00 p.m.

Skipper was pleased by the level of attendance. "We had over 400 personnel from the base come through," he said. "We're definitely going to try to come back, possibly early next year."

all my successor has to do is sit around and watch things roll," but it doesn't work that way," he said. "Our funding, recruiting, or anything else still has to go on."

"What you come to realize is that it's like a relay race — Commandants just continue a series of relay runs," Gen. Mundy said. "Each inherits from the other. I inherited from Gen. Al Gray the most operationally ready and effective Marine Corps that we'd ever had. It had just won in the desert, and you couldn't do better than that. General Gray wouldn't have been able to do that if Generals (Robert H.) Barrow and (Louis H.) Wilson, the manpower generals, had not built this great, quality Marine Corps in terms of manpower. General (Paul X.) Kelley then equipped the Corps — we bought new bayonets, new tanks, new airplanes and everything else. So each of us inherits from the other."

As the cycle continues, Gen. Charles C. Krulak, 31st Commandant, inherited "a Marine Corps of the right size, that is in pretty good organizational shape, and Marines who feel pretty good about themselves," according to Gen. Mundy. In addition, Gen. Mundy expressed that the new Commandant inherits the need of getting adequate financial resources to modernize the Marine Corps, maintain the bases and enhance quality of life issues — a task Gen. Mundy is confident that Gen. Krulak will meet.

"(Gen. Krulak) will go down as one of the absolutely finest men ever to have worn the stars of the Commandant, I assure you," Gen. Mundy said of his successor. "He is the man for the moment, the man for the job and the man for the next four years to take the Corps and skyrocket it forward."

As Gen. Krulak takes the Corps' helm for the next four years, Gen. Mundy paused to reflect on the Marines of his Corps and the Marines of tomorrow.

"If this hadn't been the greatest career, the greatest opportunity, the greatest bunch of people, the greatest experience that anybody could possibly ever have, then I wouldn't have stuck around," he said. "Those of you who get out of the Corps will become tremendously successful in whatever you do because the Marine Corps builds that into you. We build success."

"For the young Marines of today, focus on the job you have today and don't worry too much about where your next duty station is going to be or how you get promoted," Gen. Mundy added. "If you do your job in the Marine Corps you'll get promoted and you'll get the assignments you need. Focus on the here-and-now and do the best you can in what you're given to do and you'll be successful."

"The saying that 'Once a Marine, always a Marine,' is probably the most deeply-seeded and true thing that I have ever heard," Gen. Mundy said. "Anybody who is a Marine never stops being a Marine and never stops advertising it. That's a unique family to be a part of. You have to go out and be one of the dinosaurs of that family; you'd rather be a young, active tiger in the jungle, but that time comes to all of us."

Two days after Gen. Mundy's visit to Camp Lejeune, that time came to him. Upon Gen. Mundy's retirement June 30, Gen. Krulak became the 31st Commandant of the Marine Corps. Having retired, Gen. Mundy and his wife, Linda, will now reside near Mt. Vernon, Va.

UNITAS from 1A

Fort A.P. Hill in Virginia, so that Marines could familiarize themselves with ship life before the actual deployment and be aware of what they are expected to do in training operations while deployed," Terashima said.

When a MEU deploys it must be Special Operations Capable, but Unitas does not carry that requirement, added Terashima.

"We may not have trained for SOC qualification, but we are capable of handling many of today's crucial situations," he said.

"Amphibious and helicopter raids, mass casualty operations and even Non-Combatant Evacuation and Tactical Recovery of Aircraft and Personnel teams fall under UNITAS' arsenal."

USS Ashland, Landing Ship Dock 48, will transport UNITAS to its operational commitments. The three-year-old ship is fresh from its transformation to accommodate approximately 50 female Sailors that will be part of ship's company for the cruise, according to SSgt. Christopher Roupp, logistics chief.

Columbia, Venezuela, Chile and Ecuador are just a few of the countries the USS Ashland and UNITAS will be visiting after their first operation in Puerto Rico, said Terashima.

"The troops seem to be on a high, waiting with the anticipation of training in a foreign nation and the liberty they will receive," Terashima said. "Hopefully this excitement will carry on throughout the float, until their arrival back ... in December."

Reds capture Pirates to close out season

The Youth Baseball season came to an end, June 29, with an action packed matchup between the Reds and Pirates. In an exciting back and forth struggle, the High School Federation League game displayed the energy that had been witnessed throughout the season.

Only one team could walk away victorious though, and by taking an early lead, and coming back in the end, the Reds seized a 14-6 win to close the season out.

The Reds, full of determination, dominated the first three innings of play. Stepping up to bat, the Reds jumped on the board swiftly in the first inning with a run by Byron Johnson.

Subsequent runs by Jason Zamora and Thomas Tirado made the Reds seem unstoppable. The Pirates' infielders regrouped, though, and put the brakes on the Reds' batting onslaught.

Taking their turn at bat, the Pirates were unable to make any gains. With excellent pitching and fielding by Zamora and the Reds' squad, the Pirates went through the first three innings scoreless.

In the top of the fourth inning, the Reds exploded at the plate once again to make the Pirates' future seem bleak. Runs by Aaron Blackman and Raul Montalvo increased the Reds' lead to five.

Marine shares joy of martial art Kajukenbo

After the Second World War, post-war Hawaii found itself plagued with an increasing rise in crime on the Pacific islands' city streets.

To help the Hawaiian Armed Security Patrol combat and defend themselves against the growing violence, five masters, of various martial arts, collaborated to form the Black Belt Society.

By combining elements from their individual styles, the art of Kajukenbo was born in 1949. As the years passed since its inception, Kajukenbo has grown into a widely respected art.

Now, 44 years since its start, Kajukenbo is a way of life for Capt. Drexel Heard, motor transport officer, 8th Marine Regiment.

The fifth-degree black belt was introduced to Kajukenbo in 1977 while stationed in Hawaii. In August, Heard will travel to San Diego, Calif., to test for the sixth-degree belt.

Though he has been involved with the art for 18 years, his martial arts beginnings started many years before his introduction to Kajukenbo.

Heard grew up in Birmingham, Ala., where he always had an interest in sports, such as wrestling. At the age of 12, he met a Karate instructor who was in the midst of forming a school.

Heard helped the man pass out flyers for the new

Rain is defined as water falling to the earth in drops larger than .5 millimeters that have been condensed from the moisture in the atmosphere. Harmless as that sounds, these droplets have been solely responsible for sidelining the base's ever-growing sports network over the past month.

The Intramural Baseball League's season has been most affected by the amount of rainfall that has fallen over the past month. It has seemingly been at a standstill since its inception.

The season-opening games were scheduled for June 12, but were rained out and postponed. Nearly a month later there aren't any teams which have played a full schedule. Furthermore, there are six teams that have only played one game as of yet, and there is one team that the rain hasn't allowed to play once.

Because of the confusion that the rain has caused in the league, it's season has been lengthened for at least three weeks already. And if the rain continues to drench the fields on base, it may be lengthened further.

The scheduled games, however, aren't the only aspects of this sport that have been effected by torrential downpours. Practices have also been affected.

For those teams that would like to fine tune their skills on the diamond, practice is an essential part of the game, and with it the games become more entertaining for the fans as well.

However, with the wet fields that have plagued Camp Lejeune, practices are becoming more and more obsolete, and the teams are relying on their present skills to win ball games. (Taht is if they can even manage to slip a game in before it gets canceled or rained out.)

Golf is another sport aboard base that has struggled through the monsoon season. Not quite as much as the baseball league, but signs of it's troubles are evident.

The White League has been the most affected of the three golf leagues in the intramural standings. After week seven of match play there are two teams that have played six games, eight teams that have played five games, four teams that have played three games and two teams that have played only three games. And this hasn't come about for lack of trying.

There have been matches where the golfers have played right through the rain, but they can only go so far. When the lightning starts flying they've got to stop, unless they want to look like the priest on the first Caddyshack movie that absolutely, positively had to play through all 18 holes.

The golf leagues' regular season was scheduled to finish in mid-September, but because of the cancellations it should easily carry on well into October, about the same time that the World Series is projected to begin.

The Headquarters and Support Battalion Intramural Golf team picked up its fourth victory of the season after an explosive 11-1 victory over Defense Accounting Office June 29.

Played on the Scarlet Course of the Paradise Point Golf Course, HQSPT Bn. jumped out to a 3-1 lead on the front nine holes of their Blue League matchup.

Tony Apperson led the HQSPT Bn. charge with a birdie on the fifth hole to lead all golfers with an even par on the front nine.

Brad Greer kept up with Apperson stroke for stroke on the front nine for DAO, but fell short with a 1-over-par 36. He helped his game considerably with an eagle on the 471-yard seventh hole.

On the back nine holes HQSPT Bn. broke the match wide open with four points on their way to the day's victory.

Chris Towers came on strong for HQSPT Bn. on the back nine with a 5-over-par 40, which led all golfers. He finished the day with a 15-over-par 85.

Apperson struggled with bogeys on the 10th, 11th, 12th and 13th holes, but managed to close out the back nine with a 6-over-par 41. He ended up finishing the day with a match-high 6-over-par 76.

James Newsom hauled in three points for his team on the day after recording a 4-over-par 39 on the front nine and a 6-over-par 42 on the back nine.

"Newsome shot an outstanding round of golf for us," said Apperson, team captain, HQSPT Bn. "He usually is an 85 or 86 player."

Ann Burg closed out the HQSPT Bn. golfers with a 36-over-par 106 on the day.

Greer led the DAO attack with 10-over-par 80 on the day. He was followed by Troy Fisher who finished with a 21-over-par 91 and Roger Denoncourt who finished with a 28-over-par 98.

With the victory HQSPT Bn. advanced their record to 4-3, while DAO dropped to 1-4.

"We feel that we could win the rest of our matches, and be in the playoff race at the end," Apperson said.

school and in return was given free instruction.

Twenty-five years, and approximately 150 grand championships later, Heard has remained actively involved in the sport. His most recent victory came from the Greater Greensboro Open Karate Championship, June 17.

His extensive knowledge and skills earned him first place finishes in the fighting, forms and weapons categories, along with the Grand Champion title. He also holds the office of President of the East Coast Kajukenbo chapter.

The road to his victories has been long and absorbs much of his time. He fits workouts into his schedule whenever possible by doing strength-training at the French Creek Fitness Center, practicing his moves at Goettege Memorial Field House during lunch or by stealing away to his backyard.

"I try to put 35 hours a week into my workout," Heard said. "Before I enter a tournament I spend 45 days of intense training to work up to it."

Being a Marine has a slight effect on his training, (deployments, etc.) but, according to Heard, he has received much support from his family and his regimental commander, Col. Jennings B. Beavers.

"Sometimes my wife gets a little annoyed at my constant training and going away to tournaments. So I try to do as much training at home as possible, even if it's by taking a break from lawn work to practice my kicks or katas," Heard said. "Through it all though, she has always been my backbone of support."

Besides self involvement, Heard also brings his knowledge to others by conducting classes at the Camp Johnson Gym. Ranging from age six and up, his students learn the art of Kajukenbo during physically demanding sessions.

"The martial arts is not just fighting," Heard said. "It is physical endurance and discipline. I take the students through a demanding workout of calisthenics for about 25 minutes before we go into the curriculum. It takes heart to make it, so needless to say, many don't stick around after the first week."

Those who do have the desire and will to learn are then taught in a slightly non-traditional manner.

"It takes about five years to make black belt in most art forms, but to be a good black belt depends on the person," Heard said. "I teach the skills to the students and make sure they know them well."

"Gaining a belt should not follow any certain time line. If someone can prove to me that they have the knowledge for the next belt, I will test them. It is not a matter of being the best kicker, or having the best kata, or even being the best fighter; one needs to know it all," he added.

Heard's abilities have been noticed throughout the martial arts community. Not only has he been featured in magazine articles, he has received nominations for Marine athlete of the year and did stunt work in the first "Teenage Mutant Ninja Turtles" movie. Though he was proud to play a role as a "Ninja Foot soldier" he has mixed views on the martial arts movie genre.

"Movies have been positive in one aspect because they have helped bring a greater awareness to the sport and have created a growth in students," Heard said.

"But there is also a 'bad boy' image that has been created," he added. "When someone comes to my class, I'll ask them why they are interested in learning. If they respond by saying that they want to learn to fight, or beat people up, I show them the door. The martial arts is a philosophy of learning and of self-defense. It is a humbling sport."

Those interested in attending his classes can stop by the Camp Johnson Gym either on Tuesdays at 6:30 p.m., or on Saturdays at noon.

Taking a lead off at third base, Charlie Nash drew an attempted pick off. The ball was missed and Nash successfully stole home to give the Pirates a 6-5 lead.

The Reds stepped up to the plate in the fifth inning with fire in their eyes. Their desire to regain the lead was evident with a powerful triple into center field by Zamora, Johnson came home to tie the game.

Zamora was then brought in by a single from Mike Sabin, and the Reds

During the top of the sixth inning, the Reds once again exploded at the plate. With the bases loaded, Zamora nailed the ball to center field to bring Zach Welsh home. The "scoring machine" continued as Ellis Reynolds and Zamora were walked home and Johnson and Sabin stole home. A single by Welsh brought Blackman home and the Reds clinched the victory, 14-6.

With the victory, the Reds finished the season in second place with a 10-2 record. The Pirates took the fourth place spot with a 5-7 record.

Perry Lanham and Mike Alhstrom captured first place Saturday in week five of the Copenhagen/Skoal Outdoor Summer Beach Volleyball Series after a grueling 16-14 win over Brian Borst and Jeff Banek.

"It is great to win here," said Alhstrom after winning for the first time in the series. "This is where we learned to play ball and pay our dues."

Played on the sands of Onslow Beach, Saturday's series brought forth five two-man teams which battled it out for first-place honors in a double-elimination format.

Lanham and Alhstrom walked their way into the finals with an undefeated record after beating Borst and Banek in the first round and Dan Rozek and Andy Boerigter in the semi-finals.

Borst and Banek had to battle their way through the losers' bracket with three consecutive victories to get to the finals after losing to their rivals in the first round.

In the finals, Lanham and Alhstrom continued their dominance in the tournament with a 2-0 run to start off the match. Both points were picked up by Alhstrom who recorded an early kill and block.

Realizing the importance of their do-or-die situation, Borst and Banek quickly retaliated with a four-point run of their own that enabled them to capture the lead. The run was ignited by an ace from the serving hand of Borst and excellent volleys which kept their team alive.

Borst and Banek managed to hold the lead until Alhstrom blocked a Banek spike to knot the match at seven.

After exchanging points to tie it at nine, Alhstrom paraded his dominance at the net with a tremendous stuff of a Borst spike which gave his team their first lead since the early going.

Borst came right back with a bump that sent the ball to the back line, and regained the serve for his team. Borst then tallied a point for his team with a brilliant kill down the sideline to tie the match at ten.

Borst and Banek regained the lead at 11-10 with the help of Alhstrom who sent the ball out of bounds on a spike attempt.

However, with the match on the line, Alhstrom buried an ace and made the match a two-point contest.

The teams continued to battle back and forth in extra play and push their bodies to the limit. They battled through side-outs, kills, blocks, volleys, sets, dives and bumps until Lanham and Alhstrom managed to gain control.

With the score knotted at 14, Alhstrom recorded his fifth block of the match to give his team a one-point advantage. Alhstrom then put the game away with a kill on a picture-perfect set by Lanham.

"It was a tedious game with a lot of side-outs and kills," Alhstrom said. "Dan (Rozek) and his teammate (Boerigter) gave us a run earlier, but this was our toughest match of the day."

"I was touching everything," Lanham said after week five's championship. "I really felt good out there. And Mike was cranking. The devil couldn't have dug his hits today.

Listed below are the current points leaders for the summer series:

Perry Lanham	38
Brian Borst	26
Mike Alhstrom	16
Dan Rozek	14

After battling their way back from the losers' bracket, Maintenance Bn. crushed Supply Bn., 7-4, to claim victory at the 2d Force Service Support Group One-Pitch Softball Tournament, June 30.

Five teams from throughout 2d FSSG took part in the double-elimination tourney at Harry Agganis Field. Maintenance Bn.'s victory did not come easily.

By swiftly defeating Medical Bn., and 8th Engineer Support Bn., Supply Bn. seemed destined to clinch the tourney. Victory seemed more certain for Supply Bn., with a 4-2 win over Maintenance in the winners' bracket finals.

Maintenance Bn. bounced back from their loss by pounding 8th ESB, 5-2, in the losers' bracket finals. The win set the stage for a heated tourney finals.

Maintenance Bn. appeared full of fire as they took the field for their second meeting with Supply Bn.

The two teams slugged it out in a back and forth struggle and entered the fifth inning tied at four runs each. Full of determination, Maintenance Bn. began a batting onslaught and pulled away from Supply Bn. Maintenance Bn. held strong to their lead and took the game 9-4.

With both teams now tied at one loss apiece, the two took the field once again to determine the tourney's winner. Supply started strong by scoring quick runs, Maintenance Bn. answered back with a full Dominating for much of the game, Maintenance Bn. seized the 7-4 victory.

The 2d FSSG One-Pitch Softball Tournament was the first of what is planned to be an annual event.

SIDELINES from 1B

Youth sports hasn't been able to escape the liquid sunshine either. It's baseball season was lengthened two weeks before the 1st out was made. The season finale alone was postponed twice before it could finally played.

There is nothing that can be done to stop the rain or compensate for the problem it creates.

Instead it is something you have to cope with, or cross your fingers and hope it doesn't rain on your parade. At least until the weatherman appears on the news without his umbrella and gives us a bright forecast for one.

I guess you can look at the bright side of all of this rain though. After it's all gone and the sun decides to dry us off, we'll have a few extra weeks of entertaining sports action to enjoy aboard the base.

at a Surprise! Milk Is Spreading Across the Lips of Celebrities Campaign Launched to Reverse Attitudes Causing Milk-Drinking Decline

3) Milk is out to surprise America. More than 20 top-name celebrities will be sporting milk mustaches in a new $52 million education program intent on informing consumers about the health, nutrition and taste benefits of milk.

En Bacall, Christie Brinkley, Demi Moore, Joan Rivers, Vanna White and a host of other top-name celebrities are teaming up with the nation's processors in the "Milk, What a Surprise!" public-education campaign that debuted in February issues of many national magazines.

The goal is to change those attitudes that are keeping people from enjoying the great taste of milk and cause them to turn, instead, to less nutritious beverages like diet drinks and bottled waters. Many of these attitudes stem from certain misconceptions created by lifestyle changes or a plain lack of understanding about milk's superior nutritional package," says Charles E. Carron, executive director of National Fluid Milk Processors Education Program.

The reduction in consumption is especially dramatic among women. What is causing these women to walk away from milk? For most, it's a fear of fat.

An attempt to reduce fat in diets, women are cutting vital nutrients by opting for a soft drink over a glass of milk," says Dr. David Carron, director of the Clinical Nutrition Research Unit at Oregon Health Sciences University.

Many of them simply don't realize that 1 percent and skim have all the nutrients of whole milk, but with less fat or no fat," McCarron explains.

The "Milk, What a Surprise!" campaign is designed to educate consumers, especially women ages 25 to 44, about the nutritional value that these 10 other varieties of milk offer, and dispel the myths that have impeded consumption.

Collaborative research studies conducted in 1994 by KRC Research and Roper Starch Worldwide uncovered and quantified the pervasive misinformation and provided the groundwork for the new milk-education effort. Some of the misconceptions cited by the research include:

Myth: Milk is high in fat, and low-fat varieties lose nutrients when fat is removed or reduced.

According to the results of the study conducted by Roper Starch Worldwide, concern about fat content is the No. 1 reason consumers give for drinking less milk. While more than 70 percent of adults recognize whole milk as a valuable source of vitamins and minerals, less than half realize that skim milk contains the same nutrients, with just the fat removed. The fact is that all milk varieties, including low-fat versions like skim and 1 percent, have the same amounts of calcium and eight other essential nutrients, including vitamin A, vitamin D, riboflavin, niacin, vitamin B12, phosphorus, protein and potassium.

• Myth: I get all the calcium I need

from supplements and the milk in my coffee and cereal.

According to studies compiled by the United Dairy Industry Association, two out of three women ages 25 to 34, and three out of four women ages 35 to 74, fall below the recommended daily intake for calcium - putting them at risk for osteoporosis, a painful, bone-weakening disease that afflicts 20 million American women. Women in these age groups should be getting 1,000 to 1,500 milligrams of calcium each day, according to the National Institutes of Health (NIH). That's the amount of calcium in three to five 8-ounce glasses of skim, 1 percent or 2 percent milk. And according to the NIH, calcium-rich foods like dairy products are the preferred source of calcium.

• Myth: Adults don't need milk; it's only important for kids.

More than eight out of 10 (84 percent) adults agree that milk is extremely important to the balanced diet of toddlers and young children, but two-thirds (60 percent) don't think milk is important in their adult diets, according to the study. The reality is adults, especially women, need the calcium and essential nutrients available in milk at all stages in life. Bones continue to grow in density until age 35 and rely upon calcium and other nutrients for strength. After age 35, adults need calcium to maintain bone mass and slow the rate of bone loss later in life.

CAMPAIGN DETAIL

Photographed by world-renowned photographer Annie Leibovitz, celebrities bearing the "badge" of milk enjoyment - the milk mustache - offer their own thoughts on milk and its importance in their lifestyles.

Testimonials surprise the reader with new information about milk and end with the punchline: "Milk, What a Surprise!" Each quote reminds consumers what many have forgotten - or never knew - about milk and convinces them to fill their glasses again. Comedian Joan Rivers likes skim because it has no fat, so she and her dog, Spike (photographed with her), don't have to worry about their thighs. Film legend Lauren Bacall says it's 2 percent for her, ice-cold and straight-up. "With nine essential nutrients including all that calcium, it's certainly better to have than to have not," she says.

The ads, which were created by New York-based Bozell Worldwide Inc., began running in February issues of many national magazines. The "Milk, What a Surprise!" program also includes a hot line for consumers, 1-800-WHY-MILK (1-800-949-6455), with operators available to answer questions and provide free brochures on the health and nutrition benefits of milk.

The "Milk, What a Surprise!" program was developed under the guidance of the National Fluid Milk Processor Promotion Board, an association of U.S. fluid-milk processors, as a catalyst to spark a change in attitudes about milk. This multifaceted educational program will run through the end of 1995.

How's Your Family-Stress Juggling Act?

Juggling the demands of family and work is one of the leading causes of stress today. According to IOF Foresters family-stress expert, Dr. Richard Earle, parents can be filled with self-doubts that fuel personal and family stress. Earle advises that juggling demands effectively is the key to managing stress. Whether at home or work, stress heats up when the gap between "I should" and "I really can" grows too big. To help parents cope, a free brochure offering tips on juggling responsibilities effectively is available from the IOF Foresters.

Stress-reducing suggestions include:

- 1) Lower expectations, and abandon the notion of being perfect. Sometimes, the dishes can wait, but your family can't.
- 2) Get the entire family to help run the household from day to day. Give up the idea that only you can do a certain job.
- 3) Develop a support network of friends or family to help you out at certain times, especially if you're a single parent.

4) Partners can shift tasks, like shopping or bill paying, to each other for short periods of time whenever one of you needs to focus on something of immediate importance.

Busy parents should learn to budget time wisely, plan regular stress breaks for the whole family and stop trying to do everything. Cut back, and take time to relax.

The IOF Foresters is a not-for-profit Fraternal Benefit Society dedicated to supporting projects that help strengthen family life. For more free tips on parenting and family stress from the organization, call 1-800-922-4-IOF.

A Prostate-Cancer Abstract: Answers to the Most Often Asked Questions

1. How prevalent is prostate cancer?

Prostate cancer is the second most prevalent cancer among men and the leading cause of cancer deaths among men. It is estimated that approximately 40,000 men will die from prostate cancer in 1995. There will be more than 200,000 new cases of prostate cancer detected this year.

2. Who likely gets prostate cancer?

About one in nine men will be diagnosed as having prostate cancer. African-American men and men with a family history of prostate cancer are much more likely to get prostate cancer.

3. What are the symptoms of prostate cancer?

Prostate cancer does not commonly cause noticeable symptoms in the early stages. As the disease progresses, symptoms may include an impeded flow of urine, which is noticed as frequent, difficult or painful urination. Other symptoms include the appearance of blood or pus in the urine or semen and painful ejaculation.

4. How is prostate cancer detected?

Until recently, physicians detected prostate cancer by feeling for prostate enlargement via the digital rectal examination (DRE). Today, doctors are aided by a simple blood test called PSA, which detects the level of prostate specific antigens (PSA) that are secreted into seminal plasma. In healthy males, PSA levels are less than 4 nanograms per milliliter (ng/ml). Levels exceeding 4 ng/ml may indicate a diseased prostate. When a PSA test is used in conjunction with a DRE, the detection rate increases 78 percent over using a DRE alone.

5. What are the guidelines for PSA testing?

The Food and Drug Administration has cleared only one PSA test - the Hybritech TANDEM PSA - as an aid in the detection of prostate cancer. All other tests are cleared only to monitor conditions of people already diagnosed with cancer. PSA tests should always be used in conjunction with a DRE.

The American Cancer Society recommends annual PSA tests and DREs for all men over 50. For men in high-risk groups - African-Americans and men with a family history of prostate cancer - the group recommends annual tests beginning at the age of 40.

6. Are there differences in the effectiveness of PSA tests?

Only the TANDEM test cleared by the FDA has gone through rigorous testing. Clinical studies have determined that the TANDEM test can detect smaller amounts of PSA and that it provides consistent performance over time, which is especially important for tumor-marker tests, where patients may be monitored for many years. Labeling on other PSA tests clearly indicates that they should not be used as an aid in detecting cancer.

7. Does an elevated PSA mean that I have cancer?

Not necessarily. Several factors - including prostatitis and benign prostatic hyperplasia - can cause an elevated PSA level. Only a biopsy can definitively diagnose cancer.

8. What is the prostate?

The prostate gland is about the size of a walnut and is located in front of the rectum and just below the bladder. It produces seminal fluid, the liquid portion of semen.

9. What are the treatment options if I'm diagnosed as having prostate cancer?

Treatment options are determined on an individual basis, depending on the stage of the disease and the age of the patient. Treatment may include passive monitoring, hormone treatments, drug therapies or surgical removal of a part or all of the gland.

10. Why is there so much controversy about PSA testing?

The controversy lies not with the testing, but with how physicians use the information they receive from PSA testing. In many cases, prostate cancer is slow-growing, and older men may die of other causes before prostate cancer threatens their lives. However, in other cases, prostate cancer can be fast-growing, and once it grows outside the organ, it is always fatal. PSA testing in conjunction with the DRE helps physicians detect prostate cancer in its early and treatable stages, thereby giving men treatment options.

Quick Tips to Avoid Food Poisoning: From Shopping to Leftovers

Ever had food poisoning? Perhaps you have, but you thought you had something like the flu. Actually, it's called food-borne illness, and roughly 7 million Americans will suffer from it this year.

The reason so many people get sick is because, at the right temperature, bacteria you can't see, smell or taste can multiply to the millions in a few short hours. In large numbers, bacteria can cause illness.

It doesn't have to happen, though. Most (about 85 percent) cases could be avoided if people just handled food properly.

Here are some strategies - from shopping to storing leftovers - from the U.S. Department of Agriculture's Food Safety and Inspection Service to guide consumers away from the likelihood of contracting a food-borne illness.

SHOPPING

Make buying groceries the last stop on the loop. Take the food straight home to the refrigerator, and never leave food in a hot car. Make sure to check the dates on the packages, and don't buy anything you won't use before the "use by" date. Make sure refrigerated food is cold to the touch and frozen food is rock-solid. Canned goods should be free of dents, cracks or bulging lids - which can indicate a serious food-poisoning threat.

STORING

To keep bacteria in check, the refrigerator should run at 40 F and the freezer unit at 0 F. Generally, keep your refrigerator as cold as possible without freezing your milk or lettuce. Freeze fresh meat, poultry or fish immediately if you can't use it within a few days. Put packages of raw meat, poultry or fish on a plate before refrigerating, so their juices won't drip on other food.

PREPARING

Bacteria can live in the kitchen towels, sponges and cloths. Wash them often. Replace sponges every few weeks. Keep raw meat, poultry, fish and their juices away from other food. Wash your hands, cutting board and knife in hot soapy water after cutting up the chicken and before dicing salad ingredients. Use plastic cutting boards rather than wooden ones, where bacteria can hide in grooves. Thaw food in the microwave or refrigerator, not on the kitchen counter. The danger is that bacteria can grow in the outer layers of the food before the inside thaws. Marinate in the refrigerator, too.

COOKING

It takes thorough cooking to kill harmful bacteria, so you're taking chances when you eat meat, poultry, fish or eggs that are raw or only partly cooked. Cook red meat to 160 F and poultry to 180 F. Use a meat thermometer to check that it's cooked all the way through. To check visually, red meat is done when it's brown or gray inside, poultry when juices run clear, and fish when it flakes with a fork. Salmonella, bacteria that cause food poisoning, can grow inside fresh, unbroken eggs. So, cook eggs until the yolk and white are firm, not runny. When you cook ahead of time, divide large portions of food into small, shallow containers for refrigeration. This ensures safe, rapid cooling.

MICROWAVING

The microwave has one food-safety disadvantage; it sometimes leaves cold spots in food in which bacteria can survive. It helps to cover food with a lid or plastic wrap, so steam can aid thorough cooking. Vent wrap, and make sure it doesn't touch the food. Stir and rotate your food for even cooking. If your oven does not offer a turntable design, rotate the dish by hand once or twice during cooking. Observe the standing time called for in a recipe or package directions, because food finishes cooking during this time. Use the oven temperature probe or a meat thermometer to check that food is done, and be sure to insert it at several spots.

SERVING

Use clean dishes and utensils, not those used in preparation, to serve food. Never leave perishable food out of the refrigerator for more than two hours, because bacteria that can cause food poisoning grow quickly at warm temperatures. Pack lunches in insulated carriers with a cold pack. Caution children never to leave lunches in direct sunlight or on a warm radiator. Carry picnic food in a cooler with a cold pack, and when possible, put the cooler in the shade, making sure to keep the lid on as much as you can. Keep cold party food on ice, or serve it throughout the gathering on platters from the refrigerator. Likewise, divide hot party food into smaller serving platters. Keep platters refrigerated until it's time to warm them up for serving.

LEFTOVERS

When you handle leftovers, divide large amounts into small, shallow containers for quick cooling in the refrigerator. Don't pack the refrigerator - cool air must circulate to keep food safe. With poultry or other stuffed meats, remove stuffing and refrigerate it in separate containers. When reheating, bring sauces, soups and gravy to a boil. Heat other leftovers thoroughly to 165 F. Microwave leftovers using a lid or vented plastic wrap for thorough heating.

DISCARDING

If you're not sure how old something really is, throw it out. Never taste food that looks or smells strange to see if you can still use it. The mold you see is only the tip of the iceberg. The poisons that molds can form are found under the surface of the food. So, while you can sometimes save hard cheese, salamis, and firm fruits and vegetables by cutting the mold out - remove a large area around it. Most moldy food should be discarded.
