Presidents' Day:

Just another '96'?

BY LT. ED SPIVEY

They came from different backgrounds: Washington, the refined Virginia tidewater aristocrat; Lincoln, the rough-hewn, Kentucky-born railsplitter and Illinois lawyer. They lived in different centuries: Washington, in the century of English colonialism and American Revolution; Lincoln, in the century of American nationalism and Manifest Destiny. Both men were influenced by different historical movements: Washington, by European enlightenment thought; Lincoln, by American frontier democracy and Jacksonian era politics. They both shared common experience, though, which no president has experienced: leading America during its two most critical eras. Throughout American history, other presidents have faced crises ranging from economic upheavals to world wars.

George Washington and Abraham Lincoln, however, dealt with the very real possibility of the dissolution of the Union. The magnitude of their achievements are why we celebrate Presidents' Day.

George Washington: America's Cincinnatus

George Washington has been compared to Cincinnatus, the Roman general and statesman who resigned as commander in chief of military forces and returned to his farm rather than grab power in the Roman government following his army's victory over an invading force in 458 B.C.

Following the Continental Army's victory over the British in the Revolutionary War, Gen. Washington returned to Mount Vernon to his farm that he deeply loved. It was soon afterward that he was called to action again, this time to

122 civilian jobs cut; base saves $3.6 million

GLOBE STAFF REPORT

The base commanding general, Maj. General Donald R. Gardner, has approved the management review committee's recommendation to cut 122 civilian positions — 94 this fiscal year and 28 next.

The base will immediately begin assigning those individuals whose positions have been identified to be cut to vacant positions not on the list. Currently, there are 62 vacant positions not on the list open for assignment. As additional vacancies occur through attrition, the base will continue its assignment policy. The purpose of this policy is to accomplish the identified cuts through attrition over a period of time. There are no immediate plans to separate anyone through a Reduction In Force or furlough. Of the 122 approved cuts, 22 are now vacant and will remain that way.

The cuts include a cross section of 43 white collar (GS) and 79 blue collar (WG) employees, ranging from GM-13 (Director) to GS-3 (Clerk Typist) and WS-14 (General Foreman) to WG-2 (Laborer). The range of positions include: recreation specialists, carpenters, librarians, maintenance mechanics, laborers, management analysts, clerk typists, warehouse workers, electricians and pipefitters. In general terms, the percentage of blue collar reductions is 64 percent; white collar reductions is 36 percent.

No one particular area was singled out for cuts, and there will not be an elimination of services provided to people working and living aboard the base. The effect of the cuts on daily operations at Camp Lejeune will generally result in an initial increase in the time required to complete administrative matters and service calls. Over a period of time, however, the base anticipates an increase in efficiency as more individuals move into assigned positions that are now vacant but need to be filled. The estimated projected annual savings of the cuts total approximately $3.6 million, which includes fringe benefits.

Valentine's Day History

LYNN HUNTER
GLOBE COMMUNITY REPORTER

A chubby, little-boy love god, living in the imagination of many, spots a couple nearby; he reaches for an arrow, positions it, draws back his bow and skillfully takes aim. His nimble little fingers release the arrow; it flies unflinching to a lover and penetrates the heart.

Cupid, son of Mercury (the winged messenger of the gods) and Venus (the goddess of love), was usually depicted as a winged infant carrying a bow and quiver of arrows whose wounds inspired irrevocable love.

This ancient Roman god of love, Cupid, is as much a representation of Valentine's Day as cards that say "I Love You," candy in heart-shaped boxes and red-hearted stuffed animals.

Saint Valentine's Day is believed to have originated from a Roman spring festival called Lupercalia, involving peculiar fertility rites concerned with young people, according to "The New Book of Knowledge." Early Roman men wore the names of girls, who were their partners during the festival, pinned on their sleeves. This War declared on energy waste

GLOBE STAFF REPORT

After reviewing energy demand and expense charts for 1988 and 1989 as well as a forecasted chart for 1990, Base Maintenance and Base Utilities have reached a conclusion: It's time to conserve energy.

This is nothing new, but according to Carl Baker, base utilities branch director, war has been declared.

"Combating energy waste is a top priority," Baker said. He added that Camp Lejeune paid $17.8 million to power companies last year, but a projected 7.5 percent increase for 1990 will bring the bill to more than $19 million.

In order to help reduce the costs, a special utilities and energy conservation committee, comprised of all S-4/G-4 officers and area commanders, will meet to discuss energy conservation.

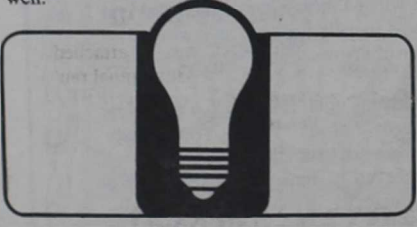

Here are a few tips that will help the energy conservation effort:

1. Lower hot water temperature settings throughout the base and eliminate hot water where feasible.
2. Set thermostats at a reasonable temperature.
3. Avoid leaving lights, computers, televisions and stereos on when not in use.

Each of those tips can help effectively fight the energy waste battle. Just because it's starting to get warmer outside doesn't mean the air conditioner has to work itself to death. The hot water heater shouldn't have to work overtime either for excessively long showers, and electrical appliances were not designed to be left on when not in use.

Living in base housing now doesn't make you exempt from this just because utilities are "free." Although you may not receive a monthly bill, the Marine Corps does, and must pay for the power.

According to Baker, the committee will have the final say on the matter and devise its own "plan of attack," but we can all help. He added that if the energy conservation problem does not improve, the luxury of air conditioners this summer may just be a memory of the past. Conserving energy not only makes sense, but save cents as well.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Words of encouragement

To the Editor:

Originally, I wrote this letter and sent it to our local command. At that time, I felt the military divorce rate was being ignored by military officials. Since that time, I have found I was wrong, and there is a great deal of time and concern on studying the matter ... and believe me it took a great deal to convince me of that!

If I were to sit at my kitchen table and discuss with an intelligent, mature individual my life in the military, I'm not sure of the response I'd receive: maybe they would shake my hand for staying sane, maybe non-belief or maybe they would just shoot me to put me out of my misery. But I could write a book!

I moved from my family when I married a Marine, and I've gained a much larger family in return. But sometimes even the best and closest of families need to talk and really listen to one another.

My husband has been on many deployments, all of them difficult for both of us and our children. I've watched CNN, intently trying to see if I recognized the shoes or the legs of the Marines shot at the cafe in Central America. I know that terror. Wondering if he'll return this time; or will war break out somewhere in the world, and he'll be sent there — because that's his job.

I have had nonmilitary friends say to me, "Floats are experienced by a lot of civilians, pilots, truck drivers, salesmen; they all have to be away from home a lot." They obviously can't even begin to comprehend the fears that are experienced by the military. The importance of the mail, CNN and world peace.

How do you explain that to someone? I couldn't even begin to put into words the emotions that exist within you, when you fear change so completely.

I've seen so many families fall apart, and it hits closer to home each time. There is a tremendous increase in and around military bases of the incidence of spouse and child abuse. Is it for the same reason? My husband and I have known five people in the past three months who have separated or divorced. Again, the same? My husband and I now find ourselves a part of an endangered species. And that's scary.

Military life is difficult, and not understood by many, including those in it! But we do share a common bond. And we're never really alone. That's the most important thing to remember. We are a family.

I do not pass judgment on those who decide to part, nor those that stay together. I have shared thoughts and words and feelings with many military wives and Marines. And they're all human! I, too, have been in the position of trying desperately to find a friend to just talk to, and sometimes there wasn't anyone to listen, just plenty to criticize. But don't settle for that. Talk. Keep talking until someone anyone listens. It helps. They can't solve your problems for you; but they can listen, and console, or give you a different perspective and support.

Just be sure that whatever decision you make is one you're prepared to live with. I've heard many times, "You married the military, and you knew what you were getting into." I disagree. Even the toughest and knowing individuals couldn't possibly know what it takes. Nor do I. But do what you believe is best for you and believe in it, and be fair. It's not just your life now. Your life touches many people. Talk to your husband or wife. You need to talk. And if you're scared, tell them; chances are, they are too.

The Corps is a tough life. But we can make it — together.

Defense, social spending

To the Editor:

Excellent article by 2nd Lt. Spivey in the Feb. 1 Globe. It is unfortunate the Federalist Papers are not required reading in our nation's schools. I fear one reason they are not is because of a powerful movement to convince the American people to give up certain of their valuable rights. There can be no compromise on this.

Important to all military personnel are the words of Hamilton in the Federalist -34. Here Hamilton states the expenses of defense will always be the greatest part of our national budget. How amazed he would be to find our social (socialist?) spending has actually exceeded defense spending. Still the central planners (socialists?) in Congress are grabbing for a "peace dividend" to waste on their counterproductive programs.

How about asking Lt. Spivey to write an article about De Tocqueville's Democracy in America? It is a very prophetic and thought-provoking book. It is very controversial in that it addresses some of the problems we must be aware of in majority rule.

Thanks for a good read.

BOOK REVIEW

COMMAND IN WAR by Martin van Creveld
Harvard University Press, Cambridge, Mass., 339 pp.

Reviewed by the Marine Corps Gazette Staff

Maneuver warfare is now doctrine for the Marine Corps, and with this change in doctrine comes strong implications for the way Marines do business, particularly in the area of command. Martin van Creveld's Command in War has much to say on this subject.

Van Creveld posits that the history of command can be reduced to a search for certainty in battle. Arguing that absolute certainty can never be achieved, he combs history for how successful armies dealt with uncertainty. Not surprisingly, the reader discovers that those best positioned to exercise command in a tactical sense are those who are closest to the battle, those who have a "feel" for the friendly and enemy situations, terrain, weather and any of the almost infinite factors that can play a role in battle. Van Creveld would argue that high commands should establish minimum overall objectives for an operation, then allow subordinate units the flexibility to meet those objectives in whatever manner their situations permit. This comes with the added proviso that minimum objectives should never inhibit maximum results; subordinate units should be afforded the freedom to capitalize on success and should expect to receive whatever support is available.

Readers should be forewarned that van Creveld stacks the deck in favor of his conclusions and that often his battle narratives fail to jibe with others' interpretations of the facts.

Readers of Command in War might consider beginning with the introductory and concluding chapters before venturing into the meat of the text. From these two chapters comes the full flavor of van Creveld's argument. Readers then could go on to digest the body of the story for its broad lessons on command, without chewing too hard on the details of the battle narratives.

As a vehicle for thought and discussion alone, this book is worth the asking price and more; as a broad brush look at the challenges of command over time, it cannot be ignored; as an introduction to the command considerations necessary to maneuver warfare, it has no equal.

GATHERED TOGETHER—2nd Marine Division Association members, along with other current, former and retired Marines gather at the base Protestant Chapel Feb. 1 for the anniversary ecumenical service.

Second Marine Division celebrates 49th birthday

CPL. KIM BUCKNER
GLOBE STAFF

Second Marine Division Association members from all over the United States were aboard Camp Lejeune Jan. 31 to Feb. 2 to help celebrate the division's 49th birthday.

The association, its national headquarters recently located at building 11 here, has been coming to the birthday celebrations for years, according to retired Sgt. Maj. Francis T. McNeive, executive secretary of the association.

"The association has been coming to and participating in the birthdays by invitation of the division commanding general," McNeive said.

Birthday activities

The celebration of the division's birth, Feb. 1, 1941 at Camp Elliot, Calif., began with a morning ecumenical service at the base Protestant Chapel. Current, former and retired Marines attended the service.

A static display was held at Marston Pavilion after the service. A variety of weapons and machinery were available for the association members to look at, and division Marines and Sailors were available to answer any questions. Some of the displays included an LAV, TOW anti-tank weapon, some engineering equipment, a simulated field chapel, a medical display where blood pressure checks were given and snipers in a couple of different uniforms.

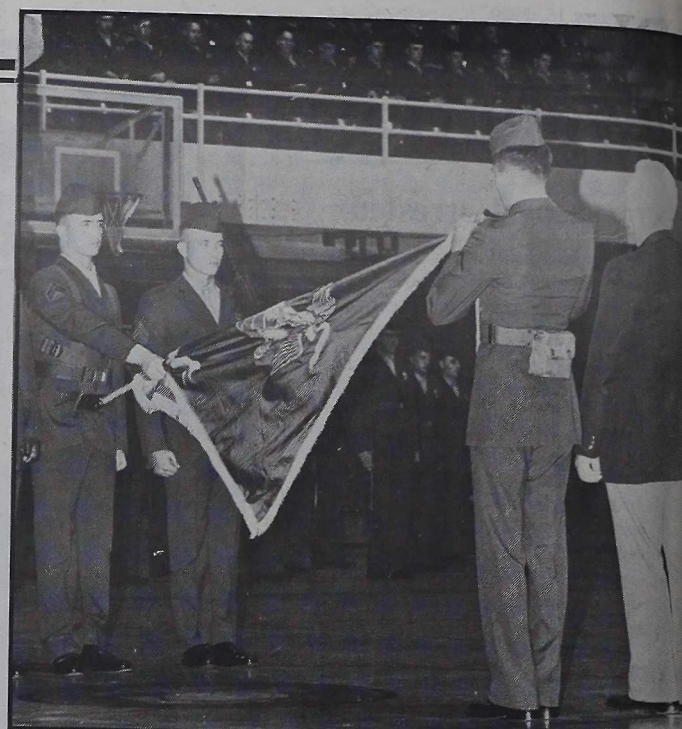

Wishing for LAVs

"They (association members) kept talking about how they wished they would have had our vehicles (LAVs) at Saipan, Tarawa and other excursions," said Cpl. William Miller, 2nd LAI Bn. "Instead of lasting two days, it would have been over in two minutes," Lance Cpl. Richard Lowe, 2nd LAI, said.

"An ol' first sergeant who was in World War II was telling us about where he's been and the different units he's been in." Miller said, "Telling us about the M-14," Lowe added. "They're really impressed with the weapons we have now," Miller said.

Following the static display, the association members had lunch at the 8th Marines Mess Hall. "The association has been supporting the birthday for years, but this is the first year that we've had a static display and lunch in the mess hall," said Sgt. Maj. W. E. Taylor, division sergeant major and a life member of the association.

The highlight of the day came during a commemoration and awards ceremony conducted by the Marines and Sailors of 2nd Battalion, 10th Marines, at Goettge Memorial Field House. Maj. Gen. William M. Keys, the division's commanding general, and Darrell B. Albers, president of the association, were speakers at the ceremony.

The division's impressive history was honored in a rededication of the battle streamers. Members of the association, referred to during the ceremony as "the old Corps," accompanied active-duty members of the division in the rededication.

Rededication, salutes

Each association member who participated in the rededication followed an active-duty Marine to the center of the field house and executed each facing movement and salute. Several of the battles being honored, such as Tarawa and World War II, were fought by members of the association who were present at the ceremony.

Awards were also presented to division Marines and a Sailor. Association members presented five annual awards including the Follow Me Award, Tarawa Award, and Lt. Gen. Julian C. Smith Award. They were awarded with a wallet, watch and life membership to the association.

The day concluded with dinner at the Paradise Point Officers Club.

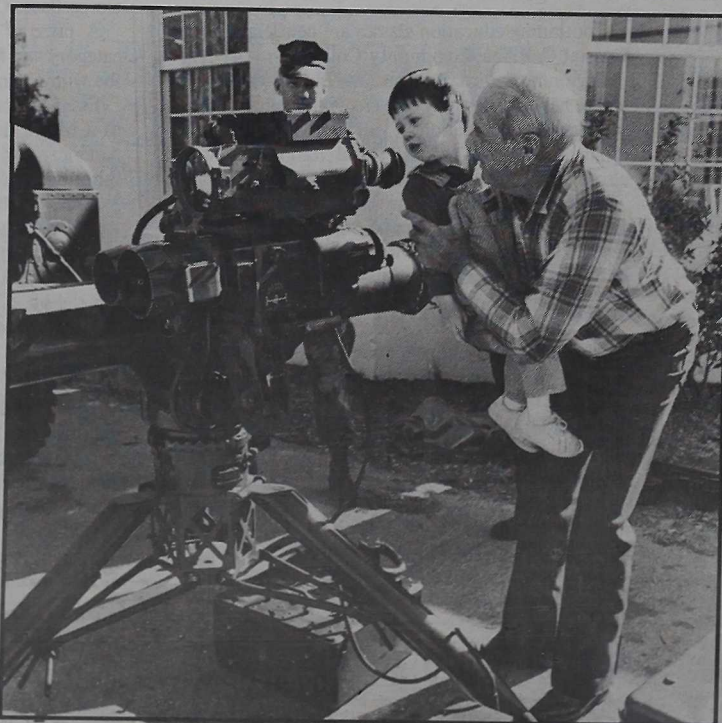

Ready for the next reunion

The association, which now has 6,000 members, is preparing for its 1990 annual reunion in Portland, Ore. These reunions allow past and present division Marines and Sailors to "band together in fellowship and to preserve the bond of comradeship between those in service and those in civil life." According to McNeive, every former, retired and active-duty Marine or Sailor who has ever been a part of, attached to, or supported the 2nd MarDiv. is eligible for membership with the association.

Biggest celebration ever

Next year's birthday celebration, the division's 50th, promises to be a big event, according to Taylor. In addition to the rededication of battle streamers and the annual awards, there will be a firing detail, division pass in review and much more. The association will again be present and take part.

These reunions allow past and present division Marines and Sailors to 'band together in fellowship and preserve the bond of comradeship ...'

Lima Co. trains for NEO exercise

SGT. T. MICHAEL GREEN
GLOBE STAFF

A light frost veiled the tall brush and loblolly pine on a cold November morning.

Marines were scattered on both sides of the main road. The grass proved decent concealment for them as their breath rose in the air like pillowy clouds. The wind whistled through well-lined field jackets and wooly-pulleys as if they were made of cheesecloth. The grunts had crawled through thick brush and chilly streams for hours trying to reach a village where several American and foreign diplomats were held "hostage."

The objective was several miles from the road, beyond the tree line. It was about 5:30 a.m. when the troops donned their gear and set out on foot, prepared for anything. About 50 Marines from Lima Co., 3rd Bn., 6th Marines, participated in a non-combatant evacuation operations training, or NEO-OP, to prepare the Marines for this kind of emergency.

It's all an act

In this mock scenario, several Marines from 3/6 acted as American citizens, foreign nationals, and a Panamanian diplomat seeking refuge and political asylum.

Communications Plt., also with Lima Co., 3/6, served as the aggressors for the exercise.

"We tried to make the exercise physically and mentally challenging," said 2nd Lt. Michael Nosbisch, platoon commander.

"This NEO operation prepares our Marines for circumstances like this and teaches them how to react, make quick decisions and carry out those decisions," he added.

Dangerous trek

The exercise began as a forced march from Camp Geiger to the Verona Loop area. In the four hours it took to arrive at the village, the Marines were attacked intermittently by simulated artillery fire, airburst and CS grenades.

En route to the village site, the Marines staged an air attack, which resulted in several casualties. The wounded were treated but remained with the units, since all medevacs were cancelled due to the heavy air attack.

As the Marines came closer to the village, Nosbisch, acting commander for the mission, sent a "recon" team to determine the locations of the guards and the hostages.

Once he received information of their location, he proposed a plan to surround the village. Nosbisch believed he could render the enemy helpless, attacking them from the flanks and closing any routes of escape.

Scouting the area

The right and left flanks were covered by several squads who made their way through the thick brush heading toward the village.

When the village was in sight, they scouted the area to see where the enemy was positioned. Around the village were several man-made bunkers, housing the enemy snipers. Silently, the flank from the left edged their way to the bunkers until they were in close range.

Once in position, they signaled the flank coming in from the right, who advanced on the village using a smoke screen as a distraction and cover.

'Too little, too late'

The snipers fired into the smoke, while several other marksmen tried to fortify their weak positions.

But their efforts were "too little, too late" for the well-organized Marines from Lima Co., who sprang from their positions, wounding three of the snipers, and capturing several others.

The hostages had been relocated to a canvas tent before the crossfire between the Marines from 3/6 and the snipers.

After several minutes of exchanging fire, the rest of the snipers surrendered and were taken into custody by Lima Co., and the hostages were unharmed.

Immediately after capturing the village, the "hostages" and the snipers — now prisoners — were separated and placed in holding stations to be searched and questioned.

A complete success

"I think everything went well," Nosbisch said after the critique. "The operation was a success, and no one was hurt during the exercise or the searching and questioning of the hostages and prisoners."

As Nosbisch prepared for the forced march back to Camp Geiger, he seemed eager for the next training exercise. But the Marines from Lima Co., 3/6, seemed content with the idea of getting back to a shower and a hot meal.

In this mock scenario, several Marines from 3/6 acted as American citizens, foreign nationals and a Panamanian diplomat ...

VALENTINE, FROM PAGE 1A is thought to be the origin of the concept that a man wears his heart on his sleeve when he is in love. The couples usually exchanged gifts. The women received perfumed gloves or fine jewelry.

According to "The Valentine and Its Origins," written by Frank Staff, when the Romans invaded England they introduced their festivals and customs, including establishing the Lupercalia festival. The English celebrated this festival until the Christian fathers started replacing the pagan superstitions with Christian beliefs. Since Saint Valentine was martyred on Feb. 14, the Christian fathers replaced the Lupercalia festival with the observance of Saint Valentine's death.

Saint Valentine, an early Christian martyr, was regarded as the patron saint of lovers. There were actually two Valentines, both beheaded on Flaminian Way, one near Rome and the other near Terni.

The first Valentine, a holy priest in Rome, assisted martyrs persecuted under Claudius II. The emperor ordered him to be apprehended and taken to the Prefect of Rome. Claudius tried to make Valentine renounce his faith. This proved unsuccessful, so he had Valentine beaten and beheaded on Feb. 14, 270 A.D. The second Valentine, the bishop of Terni, was also beheaded on this date.

During the Victorian era they celebrated Valentine's Day by putting the names of women in a box. The men would draw a name and call the girl his Valentine.

In the 17th century maidens would eat hard-boiled eggs and pin bay leaves to their pillows before they went to sleep on Valentine's eve. They believed this would make them dream of their future husbands. During this period, in the country districts of eastern France, the first young man to be seen by a girl on the morning of the 14th would become her "Valentin" or boyfriend for the entire year.

Another theory of the origin of Valentine's Day, according to the "Encyclopedia Americana," came from the medieval European era. Medieval Europeans believed February was the time of year the birds began to mate, and that suggested the notion lovers should exchange messages and gifts.

In the 18th century it was no longer a practice for men to give expensive gifts. Instead they gave love tokens or written lovers' greetings. The Duke of Orleans is believed to have made the first card while imprisoned in the Tower of London in 1415. He wrote love poems, or "valentines" to his wife in France. However, the earliest recorded mention of a handmade Valentine's Day card is Feb. 14, 1667. According to Samuel Pepys's diary, it was "writ upon blue paper in gold letters."

Valentine's cards became popular in the United States during the Civil War. The cards were elaborately decorated and trimmed with satin ribbons, mother-of-pearl ornaments and spun glass.

Although today Valentine's Day celebrations are not as elaborate as the Lupercalia festival, a lot of loving thought and care goes into the search for a token of love that will express genuine sentiment to a special sweetheart.

Virginia's delegation to the Constitutional Convention at Philadelphia in 1787. Washington was voted president of the convention, another indication of the respect and confidence his peers had in him. At the convention succeeded in producing a document so noble as the Constitution can be attributed in large part to Washington's presence at the convention and his ability to bring the delegates from the various states together despite sectional and philosophical differences. Washington could have gone back to Mount Vernon following the convention and lived out his remaining years happy and secure on his tidewater plantation. His deeds were of such renown that his place in history was secure beyond reproach. He felt a larger desire, however, to lead his country once again, this time at the start of its new constitutional order.

There was little doubt in the minds of the framers of the Constitution who should be the first president for the newly created executive office. Reluctant to take on the task of president of a new government — an office for which there were no precedents — Washington agreed to serve once more, recognizing the unanimity of support he held from the various political factions. Even skeptics like Patrick Henry, who warned that the Constitution was an "awful squint toward monarchy," were soothed by the idea of Washington becoming president.

Washington as president provided the strength of character and judgment to shape the presidency into an effective branch of government.

Historians contend that only George Washington, of all the leading figures of this era, could keep the confidence and respect of the competing political factions by rising above the political rancor and governing with the highest regard for the Constitution.

Lincoln and the Constitutional Crisis

Though the Constitution had survived the perils of its first years, it contained within it the seeds of dissolution. The festering issue of slavery, what Jefferson called the "firebell in the night," by 1860 was almost certain to lead the states to war.

The final straw was the election of Lincoln as president. Southern radicals felt the institution of slavery threatened, even though Lincoln sought only to keep it from spreading into new territories.

The importance of Lincoln at this critical time can best be sensed when his actions to save the Union are compared to those of his predecessor, James Buchanan. Buchanan denied any authority to coerce a state to stay in the Union, and so decided that inaction and compromise might produce some workable solution to the problem.

Between Lincoln's election in November and his inauguration in March of 1861, President Buchanan played out a waiting game until Lincoln took over. By this time seven states had seceded from the Union.

Lincoln had given little advance warning of what his actions would be once he took over. He moved, however, with the swiftness and determination that he felt was necessary to save the Union from destruction. Before he called Congress into special session in July, he ordered the blockade of Southern ports, called up volunteers for an expanded Army and Navy, set up a war financing plan, and suspended the writ of habeas corpus; these actions boldly invaded Congressional prerogatives and called into serious question whether any of these actions were constitutional. Lincoln was not disturbed by charges of a "Lincoln dictatorship." As he himself said, "It became necessary for me to choose whether, using only the existing means, agencies, and processes which Congress had provided, I should let the government fall at once into ruin or whether, availing myself of the broader powers ... I would make an effort to save it, with all its blessings, for the present age and for posterity."

Lincoln's persistent desire to save the Union made him the one person capable of leading the nation during its most tumultuous era. His boldness, from denying any state its right to break away from the Union to abolishing slavery, saved the ideals for the American Revolution for future generations.

WITH THE U.S. SIXTH FLEET IN THE MEDITERRANEAN — Up at 3 a.m. Still tying boots when an announcement is made for the company to form up in the hangar bay. It's much too early to be carrying this much weight. One hundred half-asleep bodies bump into one another as they find their "sticks." Marines waste no time in dropping packs.

Eyes slowly close, but the adrenaline is preventing any sleep. Besides, it's time to cammie the face and hands. Check magazines once more. Canteens are OK, and pack pouches are full of MREs. Someone yells, "Get it and go!" It's time to follow the leader through the dark — up three flights of aluminum stairs that creak from the new load — arriving on the flight deck.

The salt-soaked air is a refreshing slap in the face, but the heat of the helo engines and expended JP-5 is nauseating as the stick momentarily halts at the rear entrance. A couple of Marines slip on the ramp's surface, which is covered with hydraulic fluid. Not a good sign. Gear is dropped again. Flak jackets are taken off and life vests put on. The engine's whine is excruciating. Anyone with a hangover would bail out. The "bird" shakes worse than the last time, but manages to lift off of Iwo Jima's deck.

Prayers are said as the helo joins other early birds flying in an oval formation east of the LPH. The veterans quickly fake sleep. The weary fake it with one eye opened. At 5 a.m., the helo banks hard left, opening everyone's eyes. It's time to take the landing zone. One fake landing, then onto the real thing.

The helos are "cooking" inland up a narrow corridor. Then eyeballs rattle in their sockets as the bird bounces twice into LZ Wren. It's time to shed the preserver and don deuce gear. Marines trek down the nonskid (ha!) ramp and into mushy grass and mud, some walking, others on their backsides. Packs stuffed with assorted clothing, extra meals, ammunition, a sleeping bag and other gear help the mud suck combat boots in deeper.

Welcome to Tunisia.

The LZ is full now of Marines scurrying every which way, trying to link up with their squads. Hit the deck, unstrap the pack and soak in the mush, belly first. Untrusting eyes scan the surrounding underbrush and hillsides, with the aid of a full moon, for the enemy. More waiting while the rest of the company lands. Then platoons instinctively begin what they have rehearsed for days: secure objectives one, two and three.

Cobra gunships sniff out stubborn pockets of resistance on a nearby ridge. Charlie Co., encased in its steel AMTRACs and LAV, can be heard "doing its thing."

The once refreshing breeze is now a chilly predawn wind. Once the platoon reaches its objective, fighting positions are automatically dug. "It's too easy," mumbles someone 10 feet away. "Something's up."

"Beast Beast, this is Quebec, over," the platoon commander answers the "company CO" through a well-worn PRC handset.

"Roger Beast, moving out in 20 mikes."

Moments later the platoon is told it's time to visit checkpoint No. 9, about six "klicks" away as the crow flies. "But the damn crow never flies where we hump," says a Marine lance corporal.

Recon says there's an echanized force heading in that dir- nd our job is to stop them. Move out!" sweat. More mud, twisted ankles, torn from relentless thorn bushes and more humping.

The checkpoint eventually becomes property of Bravo Co. The enemy stops at a distance and turns around. Time for a meal, water resupply and change of socks as the sun disappears behind a mountain, and with it the afternoon's warmth. An hour later, Beast delivers more good news — "bag time."

An early evening chill and aching bodies vanish into dream land. Even the resident scorpions are hiding under nearby rocks searching for warmth as the Tunisian countryside becomes damp and cold. Only slivers of blue watch caps are visible from the sleeping bags.

"Quebec 2, this is Beast, over."

"Uh oh," mumbles the radioman. "The Beast never sleeps."

"Squad leaders up!" barks the platoon commander again. "We're moving back to checkpoint No. 9, now."

Warm bodies fight a cold fatigue, but shoulder packs are hoisted nonetheless while boots pound familiar ground again. Night displacements are nothing new for these grunts, it seems.

"Two hours sleep is better than nothing," someone says.

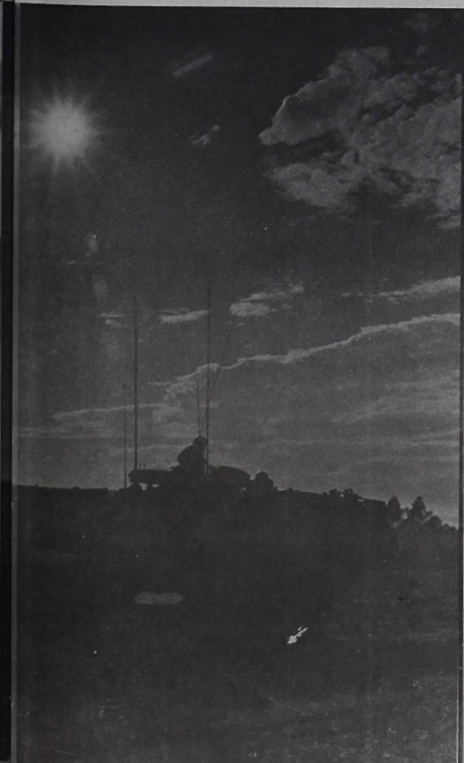

More sweat. More mud, twisted ankles, torn cammies from relentless thorn bushes and more humping.

"Yeah, remember the MCCRES," another fires back. The whole squad mumbles displeasures over that remark. And on down the road the march.

The new night position resembles a tiny oasis at a road junction. Squad leaders whisper that a 360-degree defense will be used. "Twenty-five percent alert tonight gents. Tell the rest to bag it!"

The faint sounds of steel tracks tearing up red clay in the distance drift in on a soothing breeze as grunts obey their last order. It's 3 a.m.

Fluoride: closing in on a cavity-free generation

GLOBE STAFF REPORT

Fluoride is credited with a dramatic and continuing reduction of children's cavities over the past 40 years, says the Naval Dental Clinic, Camp Lejeune. Half of the 43 million U.S. schoolchildren have no decay in their permanent teeth, according to a 1986-87 study by the National Institute of Dental Research. This is due primarily to the enamel strengthening mineral which is easily obtained in fluoridated water supplies, toothpastes, mouthrinses and topical applications at the dental office.

Tooth loss

In contrast, 40 years ago, tooth decay was a major public health problem creating much tooth loss. In fact, missing teeth caused almost 9 percent of the rejections of service recruits when the United States entered World War II. Military recognition of tooth decay as a serious health concern provided impetus for increased research.

The efficacy of fluoride in preventing cavities was painstakingly uncovered in a 30-year search by Dr. Fredrick McKay, a Colorado Springs dentist who puzzled over the mottled stains, but surprisingly little decay, in the tooth enamel of his local patients. Now known as fluorosis, the discolored enamel was caused by high concentrations of natural fluoride in the region's water supply.

Discovery

Dr. H. Trendley Dean, a public health dentist, and Dr. McKay discovered that one part per million fluoride in drinking water reduced tooth decay but did not cause enamel discoloration. In 1945, the fluoride-free water supply of Grand Rapids, Mich., was the first to be fluoridated to the optimum level. Results were quick and positive. The NIDR was established in 1948 and, with the American Dental Association, waged a comprehensive public health effort — community water fluoridation. Today, about 60 percent of Americans drink fluoridated water and periodontal disease have replaced tooth decay as the major oral health concern.

Health bill savings

Such massive public health programs have had an important impact on the nation's enormous health bills, the clinic emphasizes. NIDR estimates that the decline in tooth decay has saved about $2 million annually from dental care costs. By preserving their natural teeth, Americans also have decreased their need for partial dentures, which saved approximately $5.5 billion between 1974 and 1981.

How it works

Fluoride appears to reduce tooth decay in several ways, although the exact mechanism is not known. First, it seems to promote "remineralization" — the natural process by which calcium moves in and out of tooth enamel — to strengthen resistance to tooth decay and "heal" the beginnings of a cavity. Fluoride also may interfere with the decay process in which bacterial plaque use carbohydrates in food to create decay-causing acids. It may reduce acid production, or actually change the bacterial composition of plaque.

Fluoride plays a protective role against decay throughout life. Dental researchers believe a virtually cavity-free generation could be achieved if use of fluoride is coupled with daily brushing and flossing, healthful eating, regular professional dental care, and use of sealants on children's permanent molars.

Naval administrator emerges as playwright

SGT. T. MICHAEL GREEN
GLOBE STAFF

"What do you want to be when you grow up?", asked a little girl named Dorenda in the playground at a local schoolyard.

"I want to be a dancer," her friend Douglas said, blurting out his answer. "Well, I want to be a singer," said Dorenda, a tinge of excitement in her voice. "When I grow up I want to be a teacher and work with disabled children," said Reynetta, one of the older girls in the group.

"My mother says it's good to help others," said Leticia, the youngest of the three girls. "I know," said Reynetta, "that's why I want to be a teacher."

"I wish we could just skip school and go right to being grownups," Dorenda said, daydreaming of being a singer.

Most people, as children, asked themselves, "What do I want to be when I grow up?" Some are still asking it.

Dreams come true

As a part of Black History Month, seven young people made their dreams come true in a play called "From Rags to Riches," presented by members of the Naval Hospital at the base theater Friday.

Written and directed by Petty Officer 2nd Class Teresa Brown, the plot of the play followed the lives of seven young people — their dreams, hopes and expectations. It also focused on the problems they will face, and how they handle those problems to make their dreams come true.

"I wanted to have a show with a point and a place to go," Brown said.

Brown first decided to pursue writing plays as a different approach for a Black History Month program, when she saw a show put together three years ago by several members of the Naval Hospital staff.

Stereotypes

"It was so typical of what everybody would expect from a black history program," she said, "and it made me a little angry."

"They wanted to give some speeches from the civil rights marches and sing a few hymns from the 'old church'" (Southern Baptist church).

But Brown saw nothing in their idea that would show the audiences where the achievements of black Americans have taken them today, and the direction they should be aiming for tomorrow.

So, in 1989 she wrote a play, patterning the characters after several of her friends.

A native of Galveston, Texas, Brown originally had no interest in writing plays or being a writer.

Early beginnings

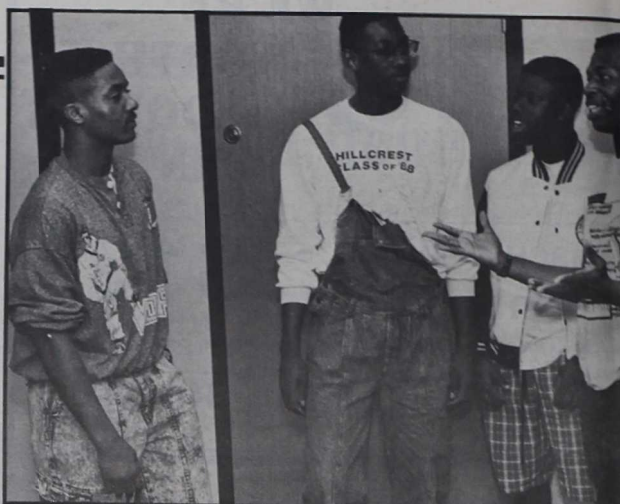

"When I was growing up, one of my first goals was to run track," said the Navy petty officer. "I wrote poetry in school for my own amusement. I thought it was cute, but I never thought I'd do anything with it."

Little did she realize, after arriving at the Naval Hospital, she would use that basic talent to help write this play and others.

The seven characters she created for this play are a poet/writer, an athlete, a singer, a lawyer, a dancer, a military officer, and a character whose ambitions lead him to become a drug dealer.

Even though the characters were fashioned after her friends, the choice of each character's vocation wasn't by accident.

"I chose these professions for a specific reason," she said. "These are the basic specialities most black Americans hope to be successful in. I wanted to show the common problems faced while pursuing these careers and some ways to solve the problems by the characters' reactions."

Message

"The most important message I wanted to get across to everyone," Brown added, "is that you can fulfill your dreams no matter what they may be."

The dream which has remained on Brown's mind since childhood is singing. By writing plays, she thinks it can help her to realize that dream.

"I have always had the desire to be a singer," she admitted. "By writing plays, I can stay in touch with the field of theater arts, but my emphasis will lean toward singing."

The 27 year-old admitted, "just being able to sing with a group would make me happy."

What also keeps Browns happy, according to her friends, is putting her best efforts into something she believes in.

"She can be very demanding," said Seaman Clara Cosen, a close friend. "We practice long hours after work on our parts in the play. Of course, everyone is going to play a little, or horse around, to keep the fun in it."

"But when it's time for us to get back to business," Cosen said, "she let's us know."

Aiming for perfection

Petty Officer 3rd Class Edward Crews said there's another side to Brown's demanding personality.

"She is a caring person who demands so much from us because she wants to get it right," he said. "She doesn't want people to embarrass themselves. She will let them get on the stage and embarrass themselves, she will let them out. To me that is a sign of a caring person."

"The command is very supportive," said Brown. "I can do without the help of professional musicians and the meaning of the play across the board couldn't do it without the actors, actresses, and that's where the magic comes in."

"As long as the rehearsals don't interfere with the patient care," Brown added, "the command was satisfied."

Many of the performers work in the hospital. "The command was letting many of the people rearrange their schedules to come to rehearsals."

Presenting the play "From Rags to Riches," — part of the events for Black History Month — was satisfying, Brown said.

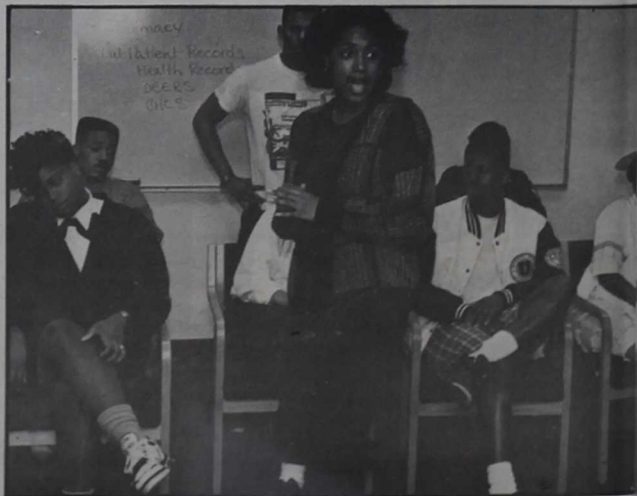

Important contribution

"I look at Black History Month as a chance to speak to not only the black community, but to everyone about affecting black Americans too," said the playwright. "It's also an opportunity to share what contributions have been made to this country and what we can do in the future."

Brown said getting people to see something positive about black Americans is "my greatest contribution and my greatest reward."

HOT CARS KILL DOGS

On an average summer day temperatures can reach 160° in a car in the sun. And dogs don't perspire through their skin as people do — their lungs are their main cooling system. With nothing to help them breathe, your dog could die in about 20 minutes.

DON'T leave your pet in the car — It's cruel and may be punishable by law.

DO leave your pet home in the shade.

Spiritual gas pumps

Spiritually speaking, we are all in the process of becoming and, as yet, none of us have arrived. The Holy Spirit is that special energy, the source of power that keeps our spiritual engine in tune and properly functioning. The Church is our spiritual gas station where spiritual comfort and hope may be found. Most of us need to fill up regularly, at least once a week, to prevent being stranded in the cold, bitterness and despair found along life's roadways. Remember, the church is a hospital for sinners and not just a club for folks "better than others." So come, renew, fill your spiritual tanks with grace. Filling up at spiritual "service stations" helps each of us get better mileage as we travel the same spiritual paths and roadways in our process of becoming.

When you look for Christ in another, you will be able to accept them. If another seeks Christ in you, then they can love and accept you as you are. As fellow travelers in Christ, we are to love and strengthen one another. There is no experience of God's love and healing power that we cannot incorporate worship. Why not bring a friend with you to the spiritual "gas pumps?"

The Ol' Grammarian Sez...

Writing is inherently more difficult than speaking. One reason is that when words are written, punctuation marks are required; when words are communicated orally, they are not. A common punctuation problem is the comma splice, which is using a comma to join two groups of words, each of which could be a sentence by itself. For example: "Living in a squad bay can be enriching, it teaches camaraderie." This "sentence" can be fixed by employing any of four different methods:

Substitute a semicolon for the comma. (Living in a squad bay can be enriching; it teaches camaraderie.)

Substitute a period for the comma. (Living in a squad bay can be enriching. It teaches camaraderie.)

Keep the comma but insert a conjunction such as but, and, or or after it. (Living in a squad bay can be enriching, and it teaches camaraderie.)

Rewrite the sentence and make one of the clauses a dependent (subordinating) clause. (Because it teaches camaraderie, living in a squad bay can be enriching.)

SCATHING REMARK OF THE WEEK: People who commit grammatical errors while conversing are the lowest of vermin. They will never be more than social buffoons.

Lejeune, New River icemen get 'skate' duty

M. E. MCLEAN
GLOBE STAFF

Joint detachment of Marines MCAS New River and Camp Lejeune will soon deploy to Nova Scotia, Canada. They're looking for what will be some "skate"

Wings and Lejeune Flames will form an all-star hockey team. The team will fly to Halifax, Nova Scotia, where they will participate in the Canadian Armed Forces Tournament. This will be the first time an All-Marine team will play in the tournament.

Several Canadian armed forces teams will be present to demonstrate their icy skills. The Canadian government is sponsoring the event and will be providing room and board for the players.

In the past few weeks the team members have spent most of, if not all their free time practicing on the ice. "The team is prepared, but not to its fullest capabilities," said 1st. Lt. Daniel G. Purcell, Marine All-Star Team coach.

"We have lost many players due to deployments and conflicting work schedules," he added.

"We are a fairly new team with not a great deal of experience playing together, but with the quality of players we do have I know that we are going to do just fine," he said.

"We are not sure what to expect in a competitive sense, but we do expect to have one thing, and that's fun," Purcell concluded.

TAR HEEL TAIL

with Spivey and McLean

'Tis the season to move slowly. There's just not too much going on in the hunting and fishing department. Most of the hunting seasons will expire soon, and the fish are waiting for warmer weather. Most of the area fishing piers are closed 'til March.

What does all this mean? For one, it's time to properly clean your gun before you store it away for the season. For another, it's time to get out your tackle box and rods and get them ready for fishing. You know how dirty and disorganized your tackle box can become in the course of a season. Empty it and clean it up. Sharpen all the hooks on your lures, replace broken gear, and throw away trash like old fishing line.

One important thing to remember is to replace the monofilament line on all reels before the start of each season. Even if you didn't fish very much during the previous season, it's important to start out with new line.

And remember, get your boat registration tags renewed now.

Skeet Club Meeting

At 5 p.m. today a meeting will be held at the Camp Lejeune Skeet Range to organize a trap and skeet shooting club. A few years back such a club not only thrived here, but also produced several championship shooters in regional competitions, according to Fred Cruse.

Cruse, who manages the range, encourages all interested shooters to come to the meeting. A big turnout is important to the success of this club. If you've never been to the range to shoot skeet, go out and give it a shot. The range is located on Parachute Tower Road. So go out there and tell of Fred that Ed and Mac sent ya'.

Proposed Regulations

If you've been reading the news lately, you have most likely heard about the decline in fish numbers off of the Carolina coast. Fisheries officials attribute this decline to a number of reasons: sport fishermen taking more fish than they are allowed, the increase in commercial fishing, and the ever-growing pollution of ocean and inland waters.

What to do? Sport fishermen can start by staying within reasonable limits and taking only what they plan to eat. Everyone can help by insisting on better pollution control and taking part in local government hearings on pollution control regulations.

In the February issue of "Wildlife in North Carolina" an article focuses on proposed changes in fishing regulations to protect fish numbers.

Among these proposals that are pertinent to this area are those calling for designation of flounder and red drum as game fish and setting minimum size limits of 13 inches for each. The proposal also calls for a minimum size limit of 12 inches for spotted sea trout in inland waters.

What's important for all of us sportsmen to remember is that we need to help protect what we have. Let's not ruin it for future generations.

Tar Heel Tails Tall Tale Contest

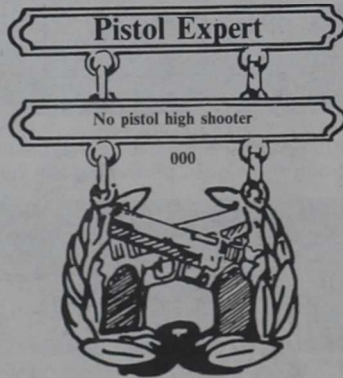

Don't forget about our Tar Heel Tails Tall Tale Contest. If you didn't see last week's column, let us fill you in.

Submit to us your favorite hunting or fishing tale. Remember, it's a tale, so you don't have to worry about us checking the validity of your story. Deadline for all story entries is March 15. The tale that wins will be printed in the April Fools' edition of our paper. The winner will also receive a free membership to the Camp Lejeune Rod and Gun Club. So, send your story along with your name to:

Mazda 323

Here's proof that a practical car doesn't have to be boring to look at... or to drive. In fact, being practical never felt so good. The all-new Mazda 323 is a stylish 3-door hatchback, and it's ideal for loading everything from luggage to lawn chairs. Also practical are its compact exterior dimensions that make for easy city parking and maneuvering. But when the chores are done, this hatchback is also fun to drive, thanks to a responsive 1.6-litre SOHC engine, patented independent rear suspension, and a slick-shifting 5-speed transmission. So come test-drive the Mazda 323—the practical way to play.
