Operation Promote Liberty: Marines help rebuild Panama

CPL. C.M. ABERCROMBIE

PANAMA — Leathernecks of Marine Forces Panama were still fighting up until the minute they boarded the USS Trenton and headed for home.

After "Operation Just Cause" ended in January, however, the battle changed direction. The new mission, "Operation Promote Liberty," was not a battle against Noriega's oppressive military machine.

It was and is a battle to rebuild Panama.

While politicians and peace makers from around the globe work to create a stable government for Panama, Marines worked alongside the Panamanians to rebuild the country brick-by-brick or in one case board-by-board.

Marines from 2nd Combat Engineer Bn., attached to Lima Co., 3/6, had an opportunity to help bridge any gaps between themselves and the citizens of Veracruz.

"A villager told us a story about a little girl that died when she fell off a bridge," said LCpl. J.C. Mayrant, 2nd CEB. "We went out and took a look, and found a way we could help."

It was here, among the shacks of corrugated tin and plywood, where the Marines found the deed that needed to be done.

The old bridge the girl fell from, was not a bridge at all, but a walkway of lumber laid across the concrete spillway which created a pond on one side and fed a stream 30 feet below on the other.

This meandering stream, which separates a community of 15 homes from the rest of Veracruz, is where the young girl fell.

For the people in this small gathering of homes, their makeshift bridge was not only a chain of boards, but a lifeline to school, work and the town below.

The engineers gathered the supplies, drew up the plans, and went to work.

When the hammering stopped, the 150 feet long, 6 feet wide bridge complete with hand rails was finished giving the people a strong and safe path to Veracruz.

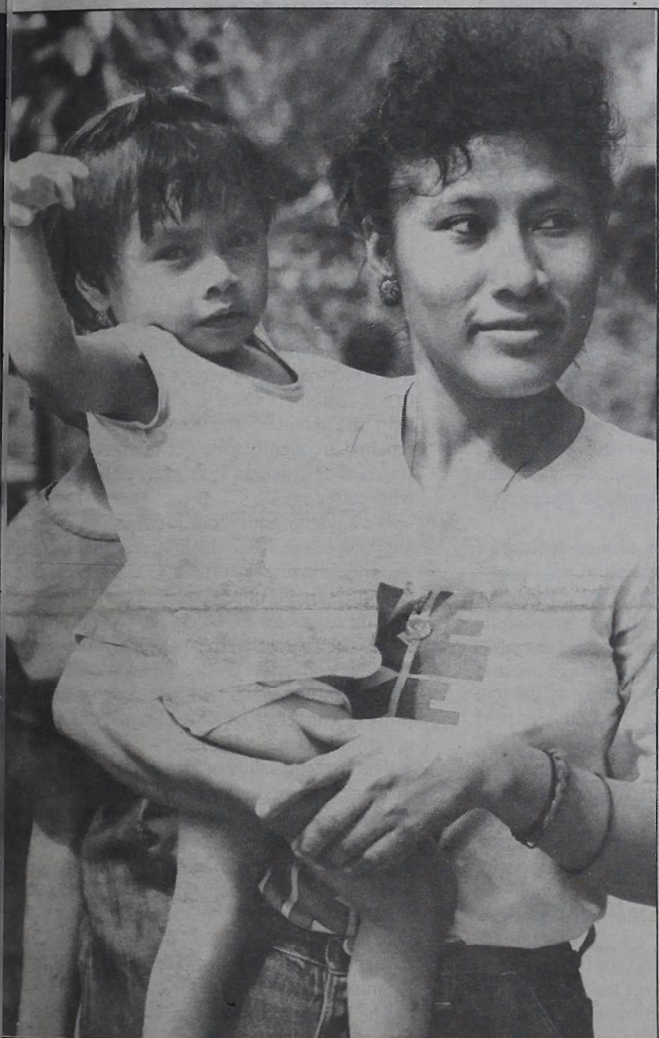

Through the experience the townspeople gained a bridge, and the Marines gained a feeling of satisfaction.

"The people were really friendly," said LCpl. M.E. MacDonald. "Even with the language barrier, we could tell they appreciated what we were doing. Helping someone like this really makes you feel good."

The bridge was completed in early May, but the Marines went back to the site on June 12, the day before they left Panama, to add the finishing touch.

Mayrant brandished a small wooden plaque to mount on the bridge railing. There was no profound message emblazoned on the plaque, nor was it trimmed in gold.

Imprinted across the plaque was a sight familiar to the crowd. Two flags, one American, one Panamanian, joined at the ends to make one. Above the flags were inscribed three words in Spanish — "Bridge of Friendship."

This annual competition is held for two reasons. First, to decide who, according to Division Schools instructors, has the most tactically proficient and knowledgeable rifle squad in the division. Second, to give regimental commanders an idea of what their best squad's weak and strong points are and

Program helps save endangered woodpeckers

BY LCPL. BLAYNE M. AINA

Dendrocopos borealis, also known as the red-cockaded woodpecker, is a bird with stripes like a zebra on its back and a black tassel on its head.

Unfortunately, its existence is threatened. But here at Camp Lejeune, an active program to protect this bird may help save it for future generations.

This bird prefers the long-needled pine trees which produces a lot of sap and grows slowly. Hurricane Hugo destroyed 75 percent of the cavity trees in a national forest in South Carolina where many red-cockaded woodpeckers lived. This natural disaster devastated the woodpecker's habitat.

The bird's niche in the ecosystem is still unknown but like any animal, when its habitat is destroyed, it must modify the way it lives. The loss of its habitat is the main reason why the red-cockaded woodpecker's numbers are declining.

Timber companies come into an area where thousands of acres of long needle trees are growing and cut down many of the birds prospective homes. Fortunately, some long needle pine trees grow on federal land such as military reservations and national forests where the woodpecker is protected.

"The Marine Corps has gone to extremes for protecting the birds," said John S. Hammond, an endangered species specialist here.

The Environmental Management Division has eliminated all training inside the boundary of trees marked with white paint to protect the birds. Marines can only walk through, fire blank ammunition or drive on designated trails or roads.

EMD also conducts prescribed burns in the red-cockaded woodpecker's habitat and also keeps the brush under the trees cleared. If the undergrowth is not clear it will discourage the woodpecker from using the tree cavity.

The red-cockaded woodpecker spends most of its life in trees scrambling up the trunks in search of food such as insects. The bark is chiseled away by the bird which uses its long, narrow beak to bore holes that serve as nests.

The drumming sounds are created as the red-cockaded woodpecker pecks away at wood and its loud calls are usually caused by males who are claiming their territory with this unique ritual. The interesting habits and characteristics of this bird intrigues many people while others deem the bird a nuisance.

The red-cockaded woodpecker is on the endangered species list and has the same protection as the bald eagle. The red-cockaded woodpecker may become another victim of extinction but with such programs like that at Camp Lejeune, the bird may be saved for future generations.

Letters to the Editor

To the Editor:

This letter is written in regards to the Cencom cable television company which "services" the base.

The base housing manual (Base Order - P1101.32G) specifically denies permission to base housing residents to install outside television antennas or satellite dishes. Because of this, if a resident wants to have decent television viewing, it becomes a necessity to have cable installed.

Another factor leading to the poor quality of service is the fact that Cencom has no competition. I called Mr. G.S. Johnson at Facilities Support Contracts. According to Mr. Johnson, they are currently working on renewing the current contract which is up in 1993. This contract is not even being opened up for bids by other cable operators because of current legislation.

I personally feel that a lot of the practices that Cencom has established are motivated by greed. A few are listed:

(1) Out of all the subscribers to cable, approximately 3,000 have rented a remote control at a price of $4 per month. This comes to about $12,000 per month income just on the rental of remote controls. This is the reason that Cencom has set up their system so that any television, cable ready or not, cannot receive above channel 13 without a converter box. This ensures the rental of more converter boxes and more remote controls. Many other cable systems are set up so that only the movie channels are scrambled and all the other channels may be received by any cable ready television.

(2) No after hours answering service. Instead, if a customer is lucky, they may get the privilege of speaking to an answering machine. The company is supposed to be checking the answering machine every two hours to see about the service, but sometimes the machine is not even turned on, and when I spoke to someone at the company, she told me the messages are checked at 8:30 the next morning when they come in.

(3) Since there is a lack of a way to communicate when the cable is out, there is virtually no after hours repair service.

(4) The Marines who are living in the barracks are charged different rates for comparable services, depending on where they live. They should be charged the same rates for the same services, regardless of location.

Cencom has a "captive market" for their services. One has the choice of moving off base always, but it seems ridiculous that a company which has such an exclusive market should not be made to provide a better service to its consumers. Certainly a service at least equal to those services offered out in town.

I feel a letter will be more effective and more beneficial in the long run since it can be saved and used as evidence in renegotiations. Maybe we can get a better system installed, or force the people in charge of Cencom to clean up their act and become more responsive to our concerns.

Elizabeth A. Morse

To the Editor:

This letter is written in reply to the concerns about Cencom of Camp Lejeune by Mrs. Morse.

The first statement I will answer concerns the pricing of Cable Television. Every program product supplier charges the cable companies for its services. There is a great deal of cost involved in production, delivery and marketing of each product. Programmers such as ESPN and Turner Broadcasting, offer NFL games and baseball games that cost millions of dollars, and the cost is passed on to the cable companies, who must pass it on to the consumer. Cencom Cable and equipment to deliver the program to the home cost millions of dollars. In short, it is cheap to deliver the cable television program to the customers homes.

Cencom of Lejeune adjusts rates each year to enable the programming to be brought to customers homes at the best possible price. In some cases, it is cheaper for a family of four to pay a month of Cable television that to attend a movie theater for one showing of a movie.

The second concern is one of poor service. Cencom of Camp Lejeune meets the service standards of the National Cable television Association. The same day service calls, next day installation, there is some unforeseen problem, such as an unnumbered of sales, storm damage to the system, personnel out sick. We answer the telephone by cond ring on almost all calls, and work with customers in any way possible to help them with billing problems. Our customer Service Representatives attend classes on customer service to improve on the service offered.

The third concern is about the remote controls. Our converters are functional without a remote control. The remote is offered for rental as a convenience to the customer. There is a very high attrition rate with the remotes, and they must be replaced frequently. We get them back in various stages of destruction, from chewed by pets, to broken with coffee.

We have not set up our system in any way to do anything but deliver a quality programming product to our customers. We offer a 15-channel basic service to customers that is unscrambled. The rest of the channels are scrambled to protect the programming from theft. The first converter is supplied rent free and the other converters desired for additional channels are also programmed with the same services as the primary converter, at no additional charge for the programming.

The fourth concern is about the answering machine. The answering machine is monitored every two hours, and any complaint recorded to be repaired the next working day. We respond to the system of any leg of the system being out, immediately. Individual customer complaints are corrected the next working day. In addition, the tape on the answering machine is checked at 8:30 a.m. every working day to make sure all the calls were logged in by the technician.

The machine is turned on at all times, but in the case of an outage where several hundred customers are calling, the tape may get full.

The last concern is that Cencom has a captive market. Due to the high cost of constructing a cable television plant, it is economically impractical to have more than one in any given area. In many ways a cable plant, is similar to telephone or power, in that it is practical and economically feasible to have only one in the same area. The cable company in Jacksonville chose to operate their company different than Cencom, because of the large numbers of converters that were being stolen each year. The cost was in the hundreds of thousands of dollars. Cencom does not have this problem with stolen converters. We lost 100 in the last three years.

In conclusion, I understand Mrs. Morse's concerns. I realize that it is impossible to please everyone, but I do try to give the best service possible, and correct any problems as soon as possible.

Vehicle repair policy

To prevent excessive vehicle repairs, the Camp Lejeune Auxiliary and MWR Auto Hobby Shop have begun a program to assist vehicle owners with an impartial opinion of the anticipated repairs and their cost. Clients requesting a vehicle repair loan from Navy Relief will be directed to the Auto Hobby Shop for a repair. Excessive costs often occur when they exceed half the current "Blue Book" value of the car.

This cooperative effort is rendered useless when clients come to Navy Relief after work has already begun on the vehicle. In the past, Navy Relief has been lenient with its stated policy of only helping with repair loans prior to the commencement of repairs.

Since vehicle repair loans have become the largest area of assistance, the Camp Lejeune Auxiliary will no longer accept any request for a vehicle repair loan if work begins prior to Navy Relief approval of the estimate.

Clients requesting vehicle repair loans should bring the following items to Navy Relief: most recent LES, written repair estimate, driver's license, registration for the vehicle and liability insurance policy.

Families need permission

Each year many national and international cultural exchange organizations bring foreign students to the United States to spend an academic year in an American high school. Camp Lejeune High School has participated in this program.

If you are interested in hosting a foreign exchange student at Camp Lejeune, you are required to obtain and comply with the "Handout for Prospective Host Families of Foreign Exchange Students." This handout is available from the base housing office. Camp Lejeune families who wish to host a foreign exchange student must secure the written permission of the Assistant Chief of Staff, Manpower, Marine Corps Base, prior to the student's leaving their home country. Organizations which place students at Camp Lejeune are required to comply with the USIA regulations and the CSJET standards.

what they need to work on, said GySgt. Burdette Chapel, staff NCO in charge of the competition.

The list of events for the three-day competition began with a personnel inspection, an Essential Subjects Test, and a 6.2-mile endurance run. Then they tested their marksmanship skills, crawled through an infiltration course and maneuvered a stream crossing.

After these events, the Marines loaded aboard CH-53E helicopters and flew to the offense/defense phase of the competition. Once the birds were on the deck, the Marines made an offensive assault.

With the landing zone secure, they set up a perimeter and defended against nuclear, biological and chemical threats.

The squads were also graded on how well they set up field phones, trip wires, booby traps and land mines.

Following this, the Marines had to find five objectives within three hours and 15 minutes on a day land navigation course. The course covered 3,500 meters from start to finish. At night, the squads conducted a similar navigation course across 1,800 meters.

The next test was patrolling. Beginning with the platoon commander's order, the squad and team leaders were evaluated on how well they issued the orders to their men.

Tactics instructors from Division Schools, who designed the competition, and two School of Infantry instructors, questioned the team members to see if the Marines knew how, when, what, and where they were going to attack.

During the patrol, each squad faced obstacles that tested judgement. One scenario: Sniper fire which eliminated one of the members in the squad. If the squad leader went down, one of the team leaders would take his place.

The new squad leader was judged on the decisions he made; how to handle the casualty, where to go and how to do it.

LCpl. Michael Hicks, radio operator, 1/6, keeps an eye out for aggressors during the patrol phase of the competition.

All of the squads had to "hump" the casualty from a field litter to a landing zone within a certain time. If they didn't make it, they lost more points. The squads went through a day-transition course and a night-marksmanship course.

The events themselves weren't too tough, according to LCpl. Michael Petronis, a member of the 6th Marines' squad. "It's a combination of all the events that wear you out," he said.

Above, the squad from 1/6 carries their casualty to the waiting CH-53E helicopter for medevac. Right, a litter team from 1/6 hauls their casualty to the landing zone.

Refuelers keep 'birds' flying

Stories and photos by
SSGT. JOHN LAVALLEE
22nd MEU correspondent

SARDINIA, Italy — The job of keeping the aircraft flying was the responsibility of a handful of key players from HMM-261 at the Forward Area Replenishing Point. "The work we're doing out here is totally different from our jobs with the fixed-wing squadrons at Cherry Point and Bogue Field," Sgt. Billy M. Wiggins said.

The Flint, Mich., native, who was in charge of the refueling engineers and the FARP, said, "Back at MWSS-271, we deal mainly with a 600 gallon-per-minute pump and 20,000-gallon fuel bladders for fixed-wing aircraft. Here with the MEU, we use a Helicopter Expedient Refueling System consisting of 18, 500-gallon fuel bladders and hoses that can pump 200 gallons of JP5 per minute."

The aircraft leave the ship fully loaded with fuel and ordnance to cover the assaulting forces. To return to the fight quickly, they replenish both at the FARP, which is set up close behind the advancing troops. "Not only do we refuel the birds, we set the FARP sight up," Wiggins said.

"We can put one in anywhere a helicopter can land. It can be across the valley or right on the beach. It's very flexible," he explained. During the two days of DRAGON HAMMER '90, Wiggins and his crew pumped more than 15,000 gallons from the FARP.

"We normally pump fuel at a rate of 55-60 gallons per minute depending on the type of helo. The Cobra and Huey take about 325 gallons. The CH-46 takes about 365 and the CH-53E takes about 1,200 gallons," Wiggins said.

"The FARP we're using here is one a few different types we can use," Wiggins said. "We could put three fuel bladders on the back of a truck for a mobile refueling station and even run one from the back of a CH-53."

The FARP can be a welcome sight for more than just pilots staring at a needle on "E." "We can refuel anything," Wiggins claimed. "Since we've been out here in the Med we've refueled AMTRACS, 'hummers' and LAVs."

All the helos that come in to the FARP don't land for fuel — some deliver it. "...we can refuel our bladders from a CH-53 to keep from having to send the whole bladder back to the ship to refill it," Wiggins said.

When they're not busy fueling birds some of the crew can be found in fighting holes. "We provide our own rear-area security during these exercises," he said. "We make a preferable target because of our value to the mission. When we're not pumping fuel we man fighting holes. We've got to keep the FARP operational if we want to win in combat."

AMTRACS add firepower to seize objectives swiftly

SARDINIA, Italy — During DRAGON HAMMER '90 the amphibious assault vehicle was a key factor in the first wave of the assault.

The 22nd MEU has 12 AMTRACS reinforcing Fox Co., BLT 2/4. The AAV crewmen take their job very seriously. "The main mission of the AAV-P7A1 is getting the troops from ship to shore," said LCpl. Brian D. Pachuiilo, from Reading, Pa.

"We have the armor to protect them and the firepower in our 40mm grenade launchers and .50-caliber machine guns to support them."

According to Pachuiilo, the "Med" is a perfect place for training with the AAV. "I feel it gives us a better chance to really learn how to drive the vehicles. At Lejeune you get used to the same trails. Out here, every place is different. You've got a lot of rocky terrain and steep hills."

Probably one of the most versatile vehicles in the Corps, AAVs are of going places tanks and even armored vehicles can't. They can barked on any of the amphibious unlike the new Landing Craft Cushions, that also lack the armor TRACS carry.

"Operationally, they like to use a big maneuver element 1 of our mobility and firepower," said.

"Probably the biggest thing we do is the enemies attention. We do deceptive maneuvers because always attracts attention," he said.

It was effective in DRAGON MER '90. AMTRACS added MEU's combined-arms firepower all the objectives swiftly, proving worth on the modern battlefield.

Aerial daredevils keep thrillseekers on edge

Story and photos by
SGT. ROBERT C. JENKS

Thousands flocked to the flightline at MCAS, New River Saturday as daredevil aerial feats by aircraft from World War II to the present dazzled onlookers at Coastal Carolina Air Show '90.

Despite predictions of oppressive heat with haze, the Carolina Blue sky came through to serve as a perfect backdrop for the airborne performances.

Before the 1 p.m. air show launch, young and old alike got an up close look at more than 20 helicopters, planes and jets parked on static display in front of the hangers at the station. Other military equipment from the infantry-side of the Marine Corps was also on display.

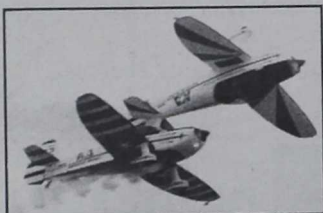

Hot dogs, hamburgers and cold drinks were plentiful, while concessionaires parlayed their souvenirs and refreshments. Morning concerts, which began at 9 a.m., helped work up thirsts before the highlight stage act, Fabian.

Fabian Forte, teen idol of the Mickey Mouse era, still showed his charm as hundreds gathered stage front to get a glimpse and, for a fortunate few, a touch. Yes, the women still screamed.

As show time for the aerial portion of the days events approached, the sponsor seating quickly filled, and thousands lined the runway for the start of the main event.

The 2nd Marine Aircraft Wing band announced showtime with the National Anthem while a parachutist jumped from 3,000 feet and guided a streaming Holiday American Flag that dangled from her feet.

Loops, dives and skyborne pirouettes of aerobatic planes trailed colored smoke in their wakes' thrilled spectators for the next four hours of the show. For days, sore necks and sunburned cheeks would surely mark all those to looked upward.

Next, a Marine Air-Ground Task Force demonstration, minus its armored assets, gave the crowd a glimpse of the Corps capabilities. People stood in awe as Marines fast-roped, demonstrated the special patrol insertion and extraction techniques and fired 105mm howitzers, all the time being supported from above with the latest in the Corps airborne inventory.

Other highlights included impressive aerial maneuvers by the Army's AH-64 Apache helicopter, the Marine Corps' AV-8B Harrier II, more parachuting by the Misty Blue all-women team and stunt flying by other propeller-driven planes.

A similar air show was held Friday for handicapped people and senior citizens. That too thrilled spectators, but a severe thunderstorm and high winds washed away hopes for the evening performances.

Left, a streaming Old Glory opened the air show, while, right, a pilot dazzled the crowd with his precision flying. Below, spectators took a first hand look at the displays.

More than 20 military and civilian aircraft were on display at MCAS.

Kilo Co., 3/6, infiltrates Corps' 'longest 110 meters'

Story and photos by
SGT. ROBERT C. JENKS

The June bugs didn't make things easier when sweat streams stung salty trails across cuts, scrapes and bleeding raspberries. Thoroughly soaked and stinking from the dank Carolina muck they had just slogged through, Kilo Co., 3/6, leathernecks were miserable.

It took 20 minutes to cross 15 meters. Another 95 forbidding meters to go.

They hadn't even hit the tangled prisons of concertina, booby-trap trip wires, and — the most feared obstacle — GAS.

The infiltration course, according to Engineer Training Area instructors, is quickly becoming notorious as the "longest 110 meters in the Corps."

"Normally, it takes a unit three hours to crawl through the course," said Cpl. Faron Kendle, a lanky Virginian demolitions and landmine warfare instructor. "When done they're dirty, irritated and exhausted."

The course simulates actual infiltration of an enemy fortification, and tests even the most calloused veteran.

"I didn't think it would take as long as it did," Sgt. Thomas Lewis said. Lewis led the first fire team who to finished in one hour, 48 minutes. "It proved how important working as a team in a combat situation is. You really have to depend on everyone else to get the job done."

Their job: Crawl under the wire in full gear with rifle and gas mask. The instructors stress the course is not designed to teach breaching techniques, so they must go under the wire. The obstacles include a tank ditch filled with muddy water, followed by a labyrinth of wire; from barbed wire tanglefoot and fences, to intricate double- and triple-apron concertina. The course is also strung with booby traps of many varieties. To add realism, instructors periodically toss illumination and smoke grenades, while launching white parachute pop-ups.

"The Marines hate the gas the most,"

said GySgt. Michael Culp, course NCOIC.

Peering through the night with mud-caked eyes, trapped beneath a maze of razor-sharp concertina is no place to reach for a gas mask. The concertina is hammered taut to the ground, leaving little room to do anything more than squirm.

The hair-raising ping of released riot grenade spoons announce an impending cloud of noxious gas — the kind of sound that becomes all-to-familiar to the infiltrating Marines. Through the night could be seen the shadows of Kilo Co. fire team attackers scrabbling for masks. Some did not make it in time. The sound of coughing, choking and wheezing Marines labeled those who were not prepared for gas attack.

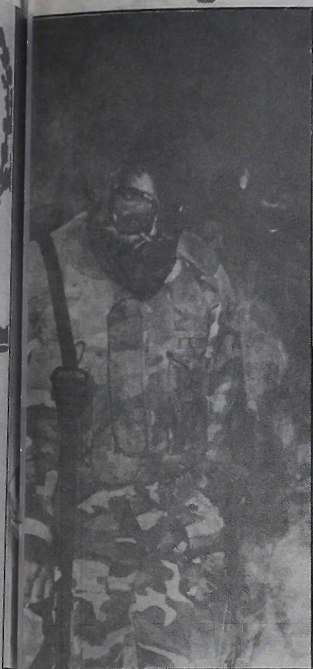

"The gas is a good test for the Marines," said Culp grinning. "It forces them to be patient and not lose their cool under pressure. If they panic then we help them. Regardless, it clears out their sinuses real good."

Of the 120 Marines from Kilo Co., that went through the course, 12 failed. They were either ejected for crawling over the wire, or helped out after being overcome by the gas.

"They love it and they hate it," said Kendle of the course. "They are always talking and laughing about it when they finish. But when they're going through it ... well, let's just say it's good training."

Top: A mask leaks in a cloud of riot gas. Bottom: A fireteam member who was snagged with Kilo Co., gets caught under the infiltration course.

Caution stressed during heat waves

BY CPL. J. JONAH COHN

"Summertime and the livin' is easy" is how the song goes, but many people might disagree. Summer means heat and humidity, sometimes making their jobs unpleasant and dangerous.

People need to keep in mind with the rising temperatures, they need to take extra precautions, according to Petty Officer 1st Class Lynn M. Mullen, the leading petty officer at the Preventive Medicine Unit.

"The key is to be aware of what heat condition we're in," she said. From May 1 to Sept. 30, Wet Bulb Globe Temperature readings are conducted. The WBGT gives temperature, humidity and radiant heat. This information is combined to form one reading that is used to determine heat and flag conditions.

A WBGT reading of 80 to 84.9 degrees is a green flag condition. Heavy exercise for unacclimatized personnel should be conducted with caution and under constant supervision.

A reading of 85 to 87 degrees constitutes a yellow flag. Strenuous exercises such as marching at standard cadence should be suspended for unacclimatized troops in their first two to three weeks on station. Outdoor classes in the sun are to be avoided.

Red flags fly during a WBGT reading of 88 to 89.9 degrees. All physical training should be halted for troops who have not become thoroughly acclimatized by 12 weeks of living and working in the area. Those troops who are acclimatized may carry on limited activity not to exceed six hours per day.

When a WBGT reading registers 90 degrees and above, a black flag is flown. During black flag, all strenuous nonessential outdoor physical activity will be halted for all units. Essential outdoor activity will be conducted at a level that doesn't exceed personnel acclimatization.

Units also need to consider training conditions. Wearing flak jackets or mission oriented protective posture gear adds ten degrees to the WBGT reading.

"It's very important to take precautions during heat conditions. The main thing is to make sure troops get plenty of water. The rule of thumb is to drink water even after you've quenched your thirst," Mullen said.

Other precautions include knowing the symptoms and first aid for heat casualties. The three types of heat casualties are heat cramps, heat exhaustion and heat stroke.

Heat cramps usually occur in the arms, legs or abdomen while exercising in the heat. Often, they accompany heat exhaustion.

Heat exhaustion symptoms are shortness of breath, headache, weakness, dizziness, blurred vision and nausea. The casualty will generally have a pale, cool, wet skin.

First aid steps are to get medical help, place the casualty in a cool, shady place with circulating air, lay him down with the feet elevated above the head, loosen clothing and equipment and give plenty of water in small sips.

Heat stroke is the most serious problem. Death or brain damage may occur if the body temperature is not lowered. Symptoms include lack of sweating, weakness, headache, dizziness, loss of appetite, nausea, shortness of breath, faintness or even collapsing. The onset can be sudden and is sometimes accompanied by convulsion, delirium or loss of consciousness.

Also, the skin will be flushed, hot and dry.

Send for medical aid and move the casualty to a cool, shady place with circulating air. Do not let the victim drink water! Loosen clothing and equipment. Apply cool water to the entire body, and fan the victim vigorously.

Mullen said those who are unacclimatized should be watched closely. Those who have been casualties before are prone to become casualties again.

"You have to keep hydrated and aware of the heat condition," Mullen said. "Stay out of the sun whenever you can."

Project Graduation successful

BY CPL. J. JONAH COHN

More than 3,600 teenagers were injured in North Carolina in alcohol-related incidents in 1988, but they were the lucky ones. Eighty-eight were killed.

Parents of students at Lejeune High School didn't want to add to the grim statistics.

"We wanted to keep the kids away from alcohol on graduation night when they're all kind of wild," LtCol. John O'Donovan, a parent of a graduating senior, said.

The Parents' Club of Lejeune High

School sponsored the first Project Graduation June 14 for students to celebrate their commencement in a alcohol- and drug-free environment.

"The Onslow County Merchants and the Jacksonville Chamber of Commerce have done a lot for us," O'Donovan said. "Most of the gifts and food have come from them. It made it possible for us to do this at no cost to the student."

"It went extremely well. There were no incidents. Everyone got home safely, and it was a quiet night on base," O'Donovan said.

first fight before losing a controversial split decision after Ali had regained the heavyweight title.

"Boxing is a great sport and a dirty business," noted Norton.

Spinks, meanwhile, won the gold medal in the 1976 Montreal Olympics and hurriedly assaulted the professional ranks.

The careers of both reached their peaks early in 1978.

Spinks, in only his eighth pro fight, won a split decision over Ali to claim the heavyweight crown on Feb. 16. A couple of weeks later, Norton verbally agreed to fight Spinks for the title, but the fight never came off.

On March 19, the World Boxing Council stripped Spinks of his crown for planning a title defense in South Africa.
The WBC named Norton the champion on March 30.

The road led swiftly downhill from there for both fighters: Spinks first ran into legal problems, then was defeated by Ali in a rematch Sept. 15. Norton lost his title on June 10 to Larry Holmes — who would hold the crown, in one form or another, for seven years.

Norton retired in 1979 and tried a comeback in 1981, but was knocked out in just 54 seconds by Gerry Cooney.

Spinks, meanwhile, suffered a first-round knockout at the hands of Gerrie Coetzee in 1979. He staged a comeback in 1980 and won a shot at Holmes in 1981, but Holmes dropped the former leatherneck in the third round of their June 13 bout.

Although Norton and Spinks are probably best-known to today's Marines, other former Devil Dogs earned lasting fame in the ring.

Barney Ross ranks among the best welterweights ever. During his 14-year career, he compiled a record of 74-4-3 with 24 knockouts. He won the lightweight championship in 1933, held the welterweight crown briefly in 1934 and regained it from 1935-38.

Carmen Basilio fought from 1948-61, rolling up a 56-16-7 record with 27 KOs and winning both the welterweight and middleweight crowns. He defeated the great Sugar Ray Robinson for the middleweight title in 1957, but lost it back to Robinson in a rematch.

Welshman Terry Downes, a member of the All-Marine boxing team in 1956, turned pro the next year and built a 34-9 record, with 27 KOs, before retiring in 1965. He held the middleweight crown from 1961-62.

Yet another world champ was identified with the Corps: known as "The Fighting Marine," Gene Tunney's career stretched from 1915-41, during which he won 56 of 58 fights. He lost only once — one fight ended in a draw — and is ek period by attending classes on the weekends, ing to instructor Doris Kanavel.

ing with boat-safety lectures, and how to operate (using plenty of past experience), Kanavel exl how to sail and how not to sail.

The students then witnessed a capsize drill. Kanavel gave step-by-step instructions of what to do if a sailboat capsizes, as her assistant tipped the sailboat over. After the demonstration, the students pulled out the boats and rigged them for their first practical application sail.

The "sailors" exercised their sailing knowledge by cruising around the bay, some with more skill than others. Kanavel's instruction paid off for Wojik, who demonstrated a couple of capsize drills herself.

After the first day of classes, the students returned to one of the base pools to take a swimming test;
treading water for 10 minutes and swimming a few laps.

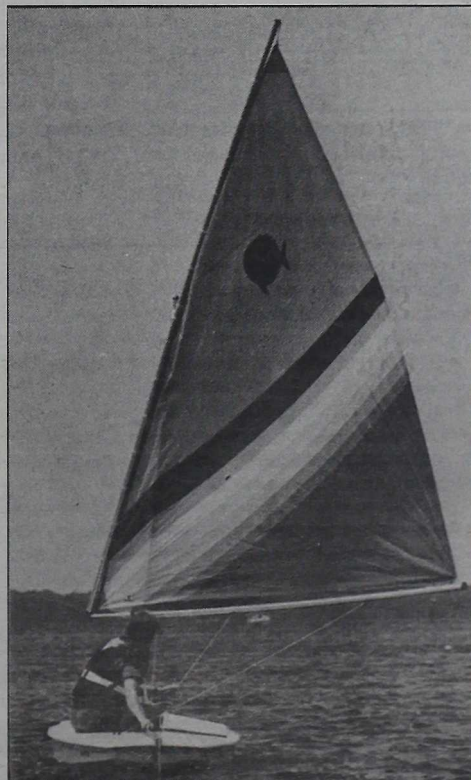

The following classes will involve more classroom work and practical application.

"For $50, students get eight days of instruction, the rental of the boat for the whole instruction period and the skill of sailing, Kanavel said. That's a lot better than the $100 elsewhere, and you still need to rent the boat."

Kanavel has been teaching sailing here since 1965.
Last year, she was presented with an award by the American Red Cross for performing more than 4,000 hours of volunteer work.

"She's a legend down here on the docks," said GySgt.
Richard Hahn, an assistant instructor.

These sailing students may not become ancient mariners of future seagoing lores, but they have acquired a new hobby for themselves to enjoy on sunny weekends — providing there's a breeze.

Marion Harkins, with a full sail, heads out.

Club members share fun afloat

Club offers nautical socializing

Story and photos by
CPL. PHILIP HARING

Flapping on the riggings of several sailboats at the Gottschalk Marina are small red pennants. A couple of them bear a traditional insignia of a ship's wooden steering wheel and "RPYC" in yellow letters. Boats flying the pennants are "members" of the Ragged Point Yacht Club.

Since 1965, the club has entertained boaters from Camp Lejeune and MCAS New River.

The "RPYC" pennant symbolizes that the craft's owner is a member of the Ragged Point Yacht Club.

"The club is a social organization that allows people to socialize in a nautical setting," said Capt. Wayne Anderson of Human Services, and current commodore of the club.

Anyone can join the club after paying an initiation fee of $25, a portion of which goes to buying the club's pennant. Owning a boat is not necessary to become a member because the club realizes that most of the younger military members cannot afford boats, Anderson said.

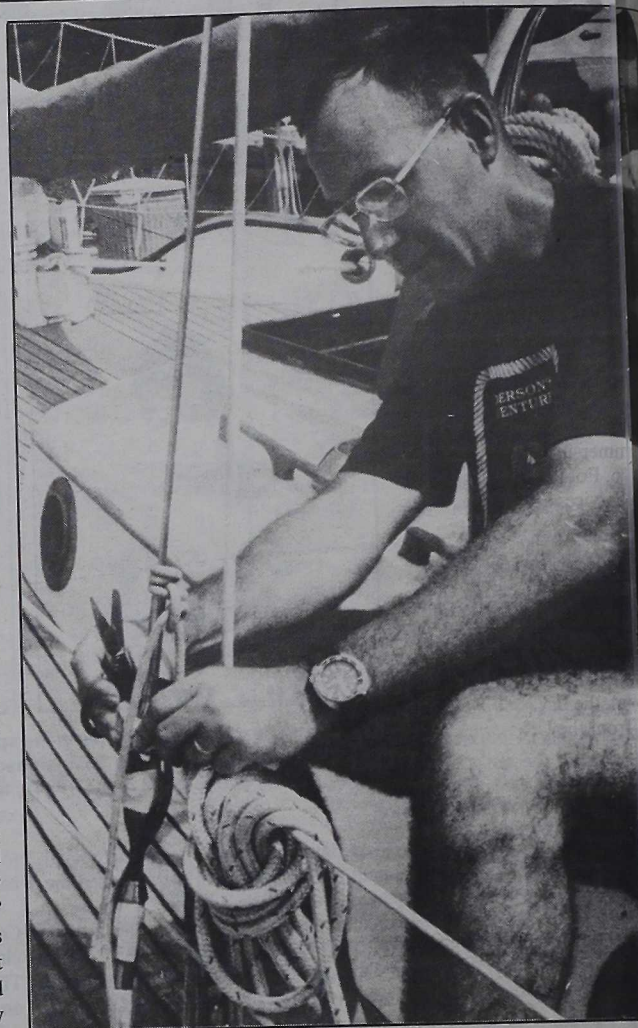

The club sponsors activities such as "raft ups," where members get together and sail out to a designated point in the ocean, a river or large waterway and anchor. After two-to-three hours of socializing, the powerboat owners shuttle the rest of the members to a local restaurant for dinner then return to the boats at sea. "We also have barbecues, fish-fries and pot-luck dinners," Anderson said.

"Being in the club is fun," said Brandon Hahn, son of GySgt. Richard Hahn, HQ Co., 10th Marines. "They have cookouts and parties all the time."

During club meetings, guest speakers from the Coast Guard have talked about sailing experiences, new regulations and changing waterways. The club gives new boaters the chance to learn and become more proficient at boating, according to Anderson.

"At the meetings, parties and other club functions, we get together and talk about boating," he said. "We learn how not to make the same mistakes that others have already made."

The yacht club is always looking for new members. If anyone is interested in joining, regardless of whether they own a boat or not, they can "sail" down to Gottschalk Marina and look for the club's "RPYC" pennants flying proudly in the wind.

Capt. Wayne Anderson, commodore for the Ragged Point Yacht Club, is off tape that secures the rigging of his 32-foot sailboat.

Doris Kanavel explains how to take the sailboat off of the rack and ready for rigging.

Bridge Co. engineers win triathlon, grab cup

Story and photos by
CPL. PHILIP HARING

"If you can read this, you are behind the bridge," was printed on the shirts of the winning team of EngSpt. Bn.'s Combat Triathlon held here Friday.

The Bridge Co. team shot 40-for-40 in the last event, placing them first in the competition.

Fun began for the 10 four-man teams with a 600-meter swim, from Landing Zone Bluebird to Engineer Point.

The swimmers had to wear footwear to protect their feet from anything in the water, which further burdened them by adding extra weight and lowering thrust.

"The swim took 10 to 15 minutes, and the shoes felt like rocks," said LCpl. Ronald Choney of Support Co.

Once they reached shore, they grabbed their t-shirts, color coded for their teams. They ran a four-mile course on deep, sandy trails and road shoulders, finishing on pavement at pistol range D-30. Cpl. Robert Bata, Bridge Co., kick ed off his shoes after reaching the range. His feet were blistered from the water, sand and distance combination.

"The run was pretty hard. It was hard to catch my breath after the swim. I think I swam a little too fast," he said.

From there, they shot 10 rounds each at silhouette targets with 9mm pistols. Every round the team missed added one minute to the last man's time. The last man's score was the team's score.

The winners of the contest won more than just a race. "The companies were in a virtual tie for the battalion commander's cup," said Capt. Le. M. S-3, 8th EngSpt. Bn. "In order to break the tie, we had to come up with something that the companies could compete in and would challenge them."

Bridge Co. not only out-swam out and out-shot the rest of the battalion, for the next six months or until the commander's cup competition they claim the title of the most physically fit company in the battalion.

BOXERS, FROM PAGE 1B

perhaps best known for his three-fight series with Jack Dempsey during his reign atop the heavyweight ranks from 1926-28.

Marines have also distinguished themselves in the Olympic Games, especially in the years since World War II.

Downes' teammate on the All-Marine team in '56, PFC. Luis Molina, represented the U.S. at the Olympics in Melbourne, Australia, as a heavyweight. Four years later, Ray Phillips and Percy Price also made the Olympic Trials for the 1960 Rome games.

Two members of the '64 All-Marine team attended the Olympics in Tokyo: Cpl. Charles Brown and Cpl. Maurice Frilot. Light-heavyweight Sgt. Art Redden kept the Marine tradition going by competing in the 1968 games in Mexico City.

Two more Marines represented the U.S. in the ill-fated Munich Olympics of 1972: SSgt. Ray Russell in the 178-pound class and Cpl. Reggie Jones in the 156-pound division.

Spinks won the gold in 1976, but was only one of several fighters that made up what may have been the best All-Marine team ever.

That team included two fighters who are still active in the pro ranks: Roger L.

Stafford and J. B. Williamson. Also prominent on the '76 squad were Tony "Malo" Santana and Roosevelt Green.

Progress reports on more recent alumni of the All-Marine team are still very slow, according to the team's current coach, Roosevelt Sanders.

Former Sgt. Eddie Donelson, the interservice super-heavyweight champ last year, is still an amateur, according to Sanders. "We saw him at the Golden Gloves (tournament) in Knoxville a while back, and as far as I know he's back home in Alabama," Sanders said.

Another former All-Marine and three-time interservice champ, Cpl. Arthur "King" Martinez, had his plans for a pro career derailed by a knee injury. At moment, he is still at Camp Lejeune assigned to 10th Marines, but isn't the injury cloud his dreams.

"If the knee holds up (after surgery) I'll probably try for the Olympics instead of going pro," Martinez said. "It's a wait-and-see thing."

Like so many others, Martinez said he had a chance to fight for the Marine Corps, but he turned it down. "I had to lure him into the Corps, and I had regretted his decision."

"My purpose, when I enlisted, was to get the chance to make the All-Marine team," he said. "You know if you can't do that, you're good."

"Nutri/System is a sure way to lose weight. I lost 83 lbs. and feel 10 years younger."

"I knew from my first visit to Nutri/System that the program would be effective. Everything about it made sense—great food, caring people I could lean on, light activity, even a maintenance program. They had everything I needed to lose weight and keep it off.

Now, I feel younger than I have in years. If ever there was a sure thing, it was Nutri/System."
