Dear Sir:

On July 27 a youth baseball team from Camp Lejeune participated in the South Region Bronco Tournament in Laurinburg, N.C. The coaches, Jerry Elekonich, Frank Brennan and Virgil Stevens, along with the parents and children conducted themselves in a manner which upholds the highest ideals of Pony Baseball and I am sure the United States Marine Corps.

It was a pleasure getting to know these individuals and working with them during the tournament.

The Camp Lejeune team is an asset to Pony Baseball and is an excellent representative of the Marine Corps. I hope that Camp Lejeune will continue to participate in Pony Ball in the future.

Sincerely,

Steve Euliss, Bronco Director
South Region

Local association promotes commissioning programs

By Lance Cpl. Michael T. Callaghan

The opportunity to become an officer in the United States Marine Corps, Navy or Coast Guard is knocking at the door!

In the past, the Marines, Navy and Coast Guard have had problems recruiting college educated minorities for their officer programs. Retaining these college educated minorities has also become a problem, but Capt. Silas Strother, president of the National Naval Officer's Association (NNOA) chapter here, said many of these problems can be eliminated thanks to education programs offered through the organization.

The NNOA is an organization which encourages servicemen and women of all ranks and ethnic groups to apply for officers' commissioning programs in the U.S. Naval Services.

Founded in 1970 by Lt. Kenneth H. Johnson, then serving as Advisor for Minority Affairs at the U.S. Naval Academy, the NNOA's main thrust is to educate people about the commissioning programs available.

Locally, the group has specific programs to educate people about what's available. "We have church visits so that parents can see that there are chances for their children to become officers," Strother said. "So, our gist isn't geared solely to recruiting people in the service, as we encourage young high school students to strive to become officers too," he added.

One avenue an individual in college has to obtain a commission is through the ROTC program, which can be found on many college campuses around the country.

Opportunities for enlisted members of the armed services exist in ROTC as well.

The Broadened Opportunities for Officers Selections and Training program (BOOST) is set up strictly for enlisted members. The Education Center, in Building 202, has a list of requirements which must be met in order to enter the BOOST program.

"The average length of an officer commitment in the Marine Corps these days is about three to five years," said Strother. With the help of senior officers, the NNOA hopes to help young minority officers realize what it takes to become a good professional officer.

"Promoting fitness for these officers will give them a better opportunity at being promoted," Strother said. "The Marines want to ensure that all officers on active duty are the best qualified of officers."

According to Strother, socialization plays an important role of becoming an officer. He said, "In order for an officer to do a job well, the environment must be one that allows the individual to concentrate wholly on his or her work."

"Being a Marine officer is not a job, but rather, a profession," Strother said. "It does not mean working eight to five or seven-thirty to five; it's a 24 hour, 365 day a year obligation."

The NNOA is financed through membership dues, and local fund raising activities such as ticket raffles, and flea market sales, to name a few.

Some of those funds go to help minorities realize their goals of becoming officers and in one recent case they helped a local Marine. "We have awarded a $500 scholarship to a young lady so that she may attend the college to which she has been accepted," said Strother.

The NNOA has a monthly meeting which is held on the second Friday of every month at 7:30 p.m. at the club here. Such things as leadership, financial planning, and career development are topics which have been discussed at past meetings.

Strother said, "Although it has been a problem to get quality minority officers into the Marines, the NNOA has sought to offer young individuals a chance at a lifetime. We want them to know there are opportunities for education that we genuinely care about the individuals who accept the offer for a commission as an officer."

Constitution minute

On November, 10, 1775, a resolution of the Continental Congress formally established a Corps of Marines. This resolution, which was sponsored by John Adams, reads in part: "...Resolved, that two battalions of Marines be raised, consisting of one colonel, two lieutenant colonels, two majors, and other officers as usual in other regiments; and that they consist of an equal number of privates with other battalions; that particular care be taken, that no person be appointed to office, or enlisted into said battalions, but such are good seamen or so acquainted with maritime affairs as to be able to serve to advantage at sea when required; that they be enlisted and commissioned to serve for the duration of the present war between Great Britain and the Colonies, unless dismissed by order of Congress; that they be distinguished by the names of the first and second battalions of American Marines..." The date of this resolution is celebrated annually as the birthday of the United States Marine Corps.

On November 28, 1775, Samuel Nicholas was commissioned a captain in the Continental Marines, and was charged with raising part of the body of Marines which Congress had specified. Captain Nicholas was to remain a senior Marine officer throughout the Revolution. He is traditionally considered to be the first Commandant.

Other officers were appointed after Nicholas. Among these was Robert Mullan—husband of Peg Mullan, the proprietor of Tun Tavern. It is reputed that Mullan's success as a recruiter, and the importance of Tun Tavern as a recruiting center, led to his commission as a Marine captain.

Academy seeking applicants

Marine Military Academy, Harlingen, Texas, will offer five full and partial competitive scholarships to the sons of Marine and Navy families for the 89-90 academic year.

"One of the original intents of MMA's founders was to provide a place and an opportunity for sons of Marines and Sailors who have been associated with the Marine Corps, to attend an independent, college preparatory school and hopefully gain entrance to a service academy," said MajGen. Harold G. Glasgow, USMC (Ret.), superintendent of the academy.

Interested sea service families, their sons, recruiters and career planners are invited to attend briefings about the MMA at the following locations and dates: 2 p.m., Aug. 20, Irvine Hilton Towers, 1405 Jamboree Blvd., Irvine, Calif.; 2 p.m., Aug. 21, Marine Corps Recruit Depot, Officers Club, Bldg. 132, San Diego, Calif.

Hunter—Killer team emerges at Air Station

Story and photos by
Cpl. Edward Rivera

"Sir, an enemy aircraft is inbound," cried a worried soldier. Upon inquiry, the soldier tells his artillery commander that everything is concealed.

"No one is to fire. It will give away our position," ordered the commanding officer. The entire encampment remained still as a UH-1N Huey circled and took off into the night. "That was an American," came the whisper through the unit.

As the commander ordered an evacuation, he sighted a flash of light, followed by the sound of a missile coming off an AH-1T Cobra's rail.

Felled by a blast that took out one of his big guns, a pale, ghastly look on his face, the commander crawled for cover from the unexpected attack.

While the above is a fictitious scenario, it is now a possibility due to the rebirth of the "Hunter-Killer Team" concept.

The idea of the Hunter-Killer Team originated during the Vietnam War, using the UH-1 Huey gunship. But the idea seemed to taper with the arrival of the AH-1T Cobra.

The Hunter-Killer team consists of one Huey, which acts as an information center to use the stats gathered to direct orchestrate the team. The data can be gathered through controlling agencies from the ground, sea and air or through visual reconnaissance.

The use of the Huey as the controller takes that added task away from the Cobra pilots, so they can concentrate on firing at the objective.

The AH-1T Cobra has a 20mm cannon mounted on its nose. It can be loaded with 2.5 inch rockets, Hellfire and tube-launched, optically tracked, wire-command-linked guided missiles, to destroy their targets.

A crew chief and ordnance men mount an M-60 machinegun on a UH-1N Huey. The Huey can also be equipped with 2.5 inch rockets mounted to supplement the teams fire-power.

"The AH-1T Cobra is a pure weapons platform which provides an optimum means of giving the ground commander close-in fire support," said Maj. George A. Messier, a Cobra pilot for Marine Light Attack Helicopter Squadron 167, Marine Aircraft Group 26, homebased at New River.

Since, the Cobra's main objective is to provide fire support, the Huey can fulfill the task of providing troop transport, medevac and aerial command and control.

Messier said, the Hunter-Killer concept of today is being implemented more aggressively. The team is an out-growth of two factors. One is the merging of Hueys and Cobras into a composite squadron. The second is the realization that there are not enough Cobras to support the ground commanders.

Now, the "Warriors" of HMLA-167 have the means to capitalize on the capabilities of both platforms—command and control, and fire power.

"The Hunter-Killer team is a building block for the squadron," said Messier. "We employ the team similar to the way a rifle squad uses a fire team."

"It's a great idea because having the Huey and Cobras working together helps us to make full use of our assets," said Lt. R.M. Sydlo, Cobra pilot.

Victor Hugo once said, "There is nothing stronger than all the armies in the world; that is an idea, whose time has come." The Hunter-Killer Team concept is one whose time has come.

The Hunter—Killer Team's mission is to seek out, locate, engage and destroy the enemy. Having the Huey as the command and control helicopter, the Cobras can concentrate on putting effective fire-power on their target.

Marksmanship training being targeted for modifications

By Sgt. Charlene A. Getchell

Running around with loaded weapons can be dangerous, but practical training.

In a combat situation, it is doubtful Marines will have a leisurely 10 minutes to squeeze off 10 rounds from a prone position at a stationary bull's eye. A cunning enemy will force Marines to shoot from positions much different from the four standard rifle qualification positions.

Although the Marine Corps has traditionally used the Known Distance (KD) Course to help individuals develop the fundamentals of marksmanship, plans are in the works to advance marksmanship training a step further.

In addition to the KD course, a Combat Marksmanship Program (CMP) will be added to the 10 days currently allotted for training at the recruit depots and the Basic School.

The CMP is designed to build upon skills learned in the KD course of fire, progressively advancing step by step towards enhancing a Marine's ability to fire effectively during combat situations.

Phase I of the CMP will be the KD course with modifications for the transition to combat firing.

Phase II will include firing from supported, unsupported, kneeling and/or standing positions from 300, 200, 150, 75 and 50 yards using existing KD ranges.

Additionally, the CMP training will also consist of firing while wearing combat gear and from behind obstacles, plus stress related or movement oriented types of firing. The Marines will have to demonstrate knowledge of the fundamentals before participating in this type training.

The implementation of these courses is planned for October 1988 at the Marine Corps Recruit Depots and the Basic School.

Section Chief and Master Gunner, Cpl. Mark Fetterolf (center) discusses initial firing data with gunner, Pfc. Mike Fisher. The two artillerymen are from Fox Battery, 2/10.

Safety a top priority to artillery batteries

Lance Cpl. F.E. Charles

Consider for a moment the consequences of firing even one high explosive round aboard base.

Now ponder the safety responsibilities borne by the artillery batteries at Camp Lejeune.

"We have to be very safety conscious here, because of the close proximity of residential areas and the public highways running through base," Capt. David L. Simple, commanding officer, Fox Battery, 2/10, said.

Stringent and layered safety procedures are adhered to within an artillery battery when they pull into a position. The position safety officer from another artillery unit calculates safety data for the guns. He then compares his numbers with that of the host unit's fire direction officer.

"This checks and balance system ensures the initial firing data is accurate and safely lays each gun on target," said 1st Lt. Nick Ferencz, safety officer, Delta Battery, 2/10.

This data sets restrictions on the zone of fire for each piece. The concept follows the basic principles of the left and right safety sticks used by an infantryman in a fighting hole.

But the ultimate responsibility of safety in artillery falls on the shoulders of the section chief. Because of the restrictions here, section chiefs have to be safety qualified and they still must have another section chief from another battery on their gun to ensure safe firing. This situation is unique to 10th Marines.

In efforts to alleviate the strain placed on the number of sections chiefs, the regiment devised the Master Gunner program a few years ago.

"The Master Gunner is a section chief who qualified to safety his own gun," Simple said.

Sergeant Darryl Strudivant and Cpl. Mark Fetterolf are two Master Gunners in Fox Battery.

"The program is designed to take the most reliable and competent section chiefs and safety qualify them according to regimental operating procedures," Strudivant said. He has been a Master Gunner for only two years and a section chief for five years.

Fetterolf on the other hand, has been a section chief for only nine months and recently became Master Gunner.

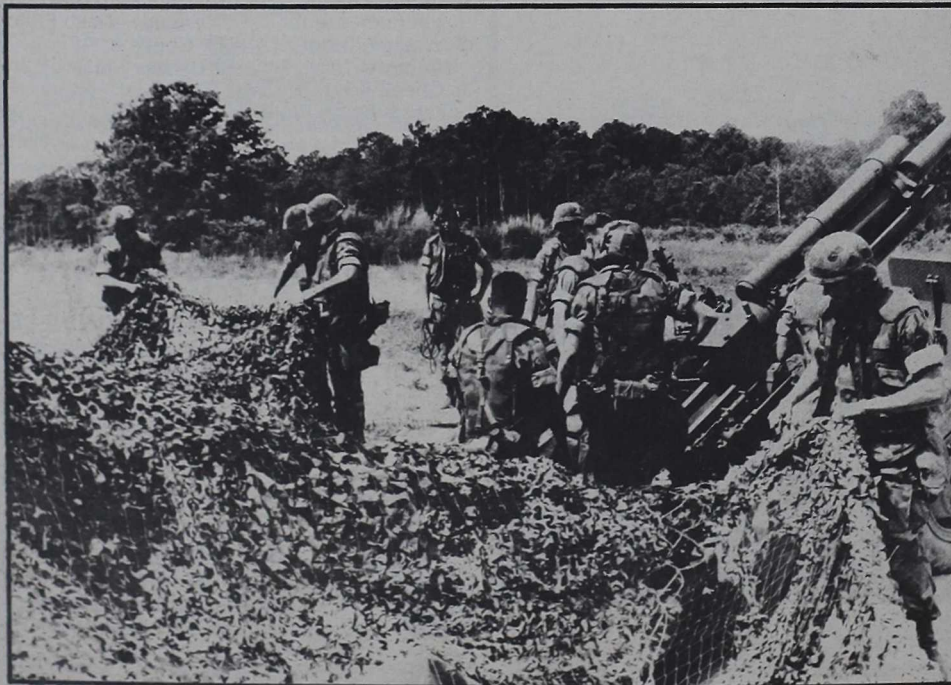

"Before a person becomes a section chief or Master Gunner, he must pass the section chief course here with a minimum of 94 percent," Fetterolf said.

The six week course deals with not only everything about artillery pieces and gives a general understanding in employment tactics, security and general knowledge to train the crew. After the artilleryman has passed section chief's school, he must have six months experience as a section chief, before taking the test for Master Gunner. Passing the test with a minimum of 84 percent will award the section chief Master Gunner status in 10th Marines.

"The Master Gunner offers the person another means to excel in and become more proficient in artillery," Fetterolf said.

"When a section chief is in charge of one of the weapons, he has to have a professional attitude about everything he and his section does," said Strudivant.

The overwhelming destructive force of artillery makes it a serious profession to be in. By following stringent safety precautions, the artillerymen of 10th Marines keep this precarious power in check, while keeping themselves well-trained and combat proficient.

While Marines from gun section one wait for a mission, they begin to put up the camouflage netting.

From boot camp to retirement:

Stone Bay continues training, qualifying tradition

Story and photos by
Lance Cpl. Timothy L. Paullin

"It is not sufficient that the soldier just shoot, he must shoot well," poleon.

As you enter the road leading to the Stone Bay Rifle Range this quote is one many displayed characterizing the rifleman theme.

Marines are trained as basic rifleman boot camp and must keep a firm grasp how to function as such throughout their careers.

Since 1943, the Rifle Range Detachment here has trained and qualified entire units and individual Marines.
The rifle range was here the same when Camp Lejeune was built," said Capt.
S. L. Strother, executive officer, Rifle Range Detachment, MCB. "Not much has changed since then."

Little has changed at the rifle range because the upkeep of the facilities are such that there has been little need to rebuild. However, many new attractions have been added to further enhance the appearance of the range, according to Strother.

Brick work is being laid out around every sign post at the range. This is an effort to give the range that "spit and polish" look just like basic training.

Basic training everything was extra clean, the grass perfectly cut and there was not a speck of trash anywhere. This rifle range strives for the same image.
More important are the firing ranges themselves.

"We have three rifle ranges here and two pistol ranges one of which is a slow range and the other a mechanical range," said Strother.

The rifle range has a team of 10
Marines to run each range and ensure safe procedures are followed. Each range has one range officer who teaches marksmanship fundamentals and maintains continuity, while ensuring safety guidelines are followed. The range officer also oversees a smooth operation of qualification procedures throughout the day of shooting.

Two Staff NCOs, five block safety NCOs, one assistant butts NCO and one range Maintenance NCO make up the rest of the team outfitted to each of the three ranges.

"Bravo range was the first of the three to be constructed and few additions have been made," Strother said.

"We don't lower standards here, we bring people up to our standards. We help them to be better marksmen; not high scorers but better marksmen," Strother said.

In keeping with the traditions of high standards, a new range is being added.

"A new Transition Range, 'D' range, is being constructed to handle the increasing number of Marines who will be required to fire the course as part of the annual requalification requirement," Strother said.

The "D" range will be excess of 1,000 yards long with movable targets and a butts area similar to the other ranges. The range will also be used by the Scout Snipers for long range target practice.

Additionally, the Rifle Range has training facilities to better serve the Marines who fire for competition.

An obstacle course named 'Maggies Revenge' has been installed to give Marines PT to build body and mind strength.

"We also have very good running trails, the 'Gold' trail is a hilly 3.7 miles of good running," said Strother. Units can also run PFTs and conduct ESTs here.

"The Marines that leave the rifle range do so with more than just a shooting badge. Hopefully they have developed a better sense of what being a Marine is all about," said Strother.

As the legendary Lt. Gen. Lewis B.

Rifle Range ensures those that leave will be well able to do just that, 'hit 'em.'

SRB clerks conquer perilous paper peaks

Story and photos by
Sgt. Bruce Cobbeldick

While Marine infantrymen are tasked to conquer the mountains of Bridgeport, Calif., some Marines face mountains of paperwork on a daily basis.

Service Record Book clerks of the Marine Corps Service Support Schools, located at Camp Johnson's Bldg. 130, must scale the mountains of books they receive each week from new students reporting aboard.

Beyond processing Camp Johnson's new students, the SRB clerks at Bldg. 130 provide a host of other services.

"Settling pay and travel matters are among the most important things we help the students with," Bachus said. "One of the bright spots is helping a young, married Marine take care of a pay problem. It makes you feel good inside whenever you can assist someone like that, especially where their pay is concerned."

Marines right out of boot camp are quite a challenge for the clerks. "Often

"We have more than 1,000 SRBs here and handle more than 100 check-ins each week," said Lance Cpl. Jane A. Bachus, who works as an SRB clerk.

There have been times when we've processed 400 Marines or more in just three days," she added.

"When we have too many students for a classroom, we conduct the welcome aboard program in the base gymnasium," Bachus said.

times, they're so confused, nervous or scared that getting them to express themselves is a bit difficult," Bachus said. "Usually after the third or fourth time I tell them they don't have to call me 'Ma'am,' they relax a little bit."

Typing students' diplomas, licenses and promotion warrants are just some of Lance Cpl. Tanya E. Nobley's responsibilities, as an SRB clerk at MCSSS. Filing is another task Nobley performs.

According to Nobley, the addition of a computer to the shop has made her job far less difficult. "Typewriters are fine until you make a mistake and have to start all over again. The computer saves a great deal of time," Nobley said. "There's nothing like being able to view your work before printing the final copy."

In addition to the active duty students, reservists have SRBs and OQRs that must be maintained too. The Marine who controls MCSSS's reservist books is Lance Cpl. Brian K. Shives.

Shives has been working at Bldg. 130 since January 1987, and usually maintains between 300 and 400 SRBs.

"For me, the SRBs aren't the hard part. Typing the discharge certificates, DD Form 214s, is the real challenge," Shives said. "Make one mistake and you start all over."

"Attention to detail and the ability to work well with people's different personalities are two traits personnel administration Marines must possess," Shives said.

Young Marines have a wide spectrum of questions that need to be answered. Whether the issue is Basic Allowance Quarters or non-judicial punishment, SRB clerks know each record represents a Marine's whole career.

"We go over the books with a tooth comb and don't stop until all bases are covered," Shives said. "Although our work is never really done, it feels good when you do it right."

Student Marines' books require frequent attention and updating. Building 130's SRB section conducts MOS training from time to time in order to stay sharp.

U.S., Cameroon Marines conduct joint operation

Story and photos by
Cpl. Dave Mundy

Manoka Beach, Cameroon — A startled woman watched with a puzzled look on her face as a file of men wearing fatigues and carrying weapons moved swiftly and silently among the palm and thatch huts of her village. Most of the men were wearing unfamiliar uniforms and speaking in an odd language.

"Americaine?," she timidly asked one of the men hurrying past, carrying a rifle in addition to his weapon. The man nodded. A broad smile then crossed his face and he waved as he disappeared into the brush. "Bonjour!" he exclaimed.

U.S. Marines deployed with the West African Training Cruise (WATC)-88 and a 50-man unit from the Cameroon Marine Corps combined July 15 on the first joint amphibious operation between Marines from the United States and the West African nation.

Exercise Manoka-88 was also the first time U.S. and Cameroon amphibious forces had staged a joint amphibious landing.

The exercise was conducted on very short notice, said 1st Lt. T.J. McGuire, commanding officer of the WATC Marine detachment. "It was conceived, planned and executed in just over three hours. To do something like that off was an amazing effort."

The exercise followed a two-hour sea-to-land training aboard USS Sumter (LST-1181), docked at the port of Douala. Three LVTP-7s from 2nd Amphibian Bn., 2nd MarDiv., carried a composite platoon from the 2nd Marine and a 50-man force from the Cameroon Marine battalion to Manoka Beach.

Lance Cpl. B. T. Prieto establishes radio contact with the other elements of the assault as U.S. and Cameroon observers confer during Exercise Manoka 88. The exercise, part of the West African Training Cruise-88, marked the first-ever amphibious assault training by the Cameroon marine battalion.

The amphibious assault vehicles were escorted by four 'swift ships' of the Cameroon Navy.

The Marines hit the beach, moved swiftly inland and secured their objective, an unoccupied post of the Cameroon gendarmie, in less than an hour.

"The Cameroonians were very nervous when the 'tracs' first hit the water," said Lance Cpl. T.J. McCullough. "After we got underway, they lost their jitters."

"They did the same thing any good Marine does," said Lance Cpl. J.R. Piatt of his Cameroon counterparts during the two-hour AAV ride. "They caught up on their rest and checked their gear!"

At the beach, two of the 'hogs' bogged down in the sand and mud in shallow water just offshore. The Americans wasted little time in lending their experience, leading the Cameroonians off the 'tracs' and wading to shore.

"I think that part of the operation showed everyone how well our Marines react and how flexible they are," said Staff Sgt. D.L. Hantz, section leader for the AAVs. "Corporal (D.J.) Freelove saw what the situation was and took the initiative in getting his squad and the Cameroonians out of the 'trac,' into the water and onto the beach."

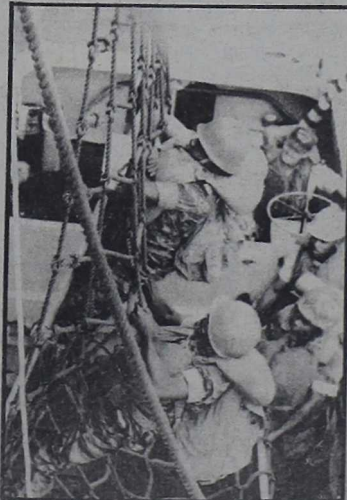

The Marines established their beach positions quickly and began moving inland toward the gendarmie post.

"The debark looked very good," said Sgt. M.D. Samuels, platoon sergeant for the infantrymen from 3/2. "The Cameroonians came out and cleared the beach in a hurry. I got my team in position and then we all went inland."

After leaving the beach, the assault force divided into three groups and maneuvered to a flank attack on the gendarmie post. Smoke grenades signaled the start and end of the attack. The force then combined and 'humped' back to the beach for a chow break and the chance to get to know one another.

"We had to rely on the Cameroonians to navigate to the objective," McGuire said. "There had been no reconnaissance of the area and the map the Cameroon commander, Capt. Bob Ebua, showed me had no terrain markings and no points of reference. In spite of that, it was a very realistic scheme of maneuver in that it gave all of us the chance to navigate in a way we might have to in a war-time situation."

"Our Marines and theirs responded very well to the situations that presented themselves," McGuire said. "We showed our flexibility."

U.S., Cameroonian Marines conduct historic joint amphibious landing

Story and photos by
Cpl. Dave Mundy

Aboard U.S.S. Sumter—Marines stake a claim as the world's best fighters. For two months this summer, the 30-man Marine detachment on the West African Training Cruise (WATC)-88 staked a claim as ambassadors of goodwill as well.

The cruise aboard USS Sumter (LST-1181) saw stops in six west African ports on a whirlwind tour.

Along with static displays and amphibious demonstrations, WATC-88's Marines were also part of the first-ever joint operation between American and Cameroonian Marines. Marines and Sailors of the two nations combined to make the first amphibious landing in Cameroon's history.

"I think we opened doors where none existed before," said Cmdr. Hank Prevette, captain of the ship. "Everywhere we went we were very well received and made new friendships."

The tour included stops in Nouakchott, Mauritania, Abidjan, Ivory Coast; Tema, Ghana; Lome, Togo; Douala, Cameroon; and Malabo, Equatorial Guinea. Sumter's Sailors, Marines, Coast Guardsmen and Naval Reservists conducted tours of the ship, symposia for local naval and medical personnel and participated in community relations projects and numerous sporting events, in addition to the Marines' demonstrations.

The Cameroon exercise, called Exercise Manoka

88, saw three LVTP-7s from 2nd Assault Amphibian Bn. and a formation of four 'swift ships' from the Cameroonian Navy ferry, about 30 U.S. and 50 Cameroonian Marines along a 27-kilometer river march from the port at Douala. The two-hour trip finished with the Marines storming ashore on Manoka Beach and rapidly moving inland to secure the objective in a flanking attack.

"This was Cameroon's first-ever amphibious landing," McGuire said. "Their marine battalion is only a little over a year old, and for them to be able to mount this type of operation on as little notice as we had was an outstanding achievement. Their Marines and officers were very disciplined and very professional."

The Marines' static displays of infantry weapons and equipment gathered large crowds during the tours of the ship. Personnel from the various U.S. embassies, their families and numerous foreign dignitaries took the time to examine and ask questions of the Marines.

"Everyone I talked to seemed impressed by what they saw," Lance Cpl. John L. Kelly said. The French Marines that came aboard at Abidjan recognized the SAW (Squad Automatic Weapon) and several of our other weapons as well.

The visitors got their biggest thrills from the amphibious vehicles, however.

"Everybody was initially shocked when we first hit the water," said Lance Cpl. S.J. Mercier. "The kids were bouncing around like it was all some kind of weird boat ride."

"Everyone that rode along on one of the AAV's water ballets was very impressed," said 1st Lt. T.J. McGuire said. "They were amazed by their size and weight and the fact they could float in such a big, heavy machine."

Community relations continued ashore, where local officials and coordinators from the U.S. Embassies supervised volunteers from the Sumter in several projects. Included in these were the painting of the children's wing of the Army Hospital in Ghana and the refurbishing of a center for mothers and children in Mauritania.

The highlight of the cruise for Sumter's crew, of course, was liberty call. The Marines and Sailors were universally well-received.

"The only regret I have is that I'd have liked to have had more time to see the countries and people," said Lance Cpl. R.G. Grimball. "All the people seemed very friendly and genuinely interested in the U.S. and Americans."

Various tours gave the Marines the chance to see some of the more outstanding sights.

"The stained-glass mosaics and the style of the building were unbelievable," said Cpl. A.D. Murphy of St. Paul's Cathedral in Abidjan, a city known as 'the Paris of Africa.'

"We had the chance to go to the top of the steeple and got a breath-taking view of the city," Murphy said.

Local souvenirs were plentiful, and the Marines soon warned to the traditional African way of haggling over prices.

"I bought some wood carvings and ivory necklaces," Lance Cpl. Elton Williams said. "It was a shock when you first get a quote for a price, but as soon as you'd start talking them down, it was fun bargaining."

"I got some ivory and malachite and wound up trading my watch away," Murphy said. "They tried to get me to trade my shoes and shirt too!"

In addition to the local sights, the U.S. embassy personnel and Marine Security Guard detachments gives a hands-on explanation of machine guns to Sailors from Equatorial Guinea during the WATC-88 stop in Malabo.

"The most successful part of the cruise, I think, was the way our Marines performed," McGuire said. "They were all diplomats for the Marine Corps. To the people we met, the 30 Marines of the WATC Marine detachment were the Marine Corps, and the impression they made was very favorable."

Curious onlookers gather at the pier at Tema, Ghana, while awaiting an amphibious demonstration by Marines of WATC-88. Marines staged static displays and demonstrations by the detachment's three LVTP-7s at each stop of the six-port tour.

Ritual turns 'wogs' into 'shellbacks'

Story and photos by
Cpl. Dave Mundy

State of the Raging Main— A U.S. Navy ship was siezed and held for several hours July 12 and more than 200 Marines and Sailors were put on trial for "heinous crimes against the realm of Neptuneus Rex."

The trials were all in fun, of course, as USS Sumter (LST-1181) crossed the equator and took time out from its busy West Africa Training Cruise (WATC)-88 to cleanse the ship of "filthy wogs."

A 'wog' is considered anyone who has not crossed the equator and gone through the rites of becoming a 'shellback.'

"The ship was overrun with slimy wogs," said Sgt. M.D. Samuels, part of a composite platoon from 3rd Bn., 2nd Marines aboard ship for the WATC cruise and a hardened 'shellback' (one who has previously crossed the equator). King Neptune directed us to remedy the situation."

"I've never been that wet before," said Lance Cpl. P.A. Ivery, who endured the initiation ceremony to earn his 'shellback' card. "I had a lot of fun, especially when it was over and I got to watch everyone else go through it."

"I've been waiting a long time to become a 'shellback,'" 3/2 corpsman HM3 Shaun Frost said. "Now my brother will stop calling me a wog."

After a healthy breakfast of various 'food from the sea' — including delicacies like jellyfish eyes — the 'slimy Wogs' were tested and tried by a tribunal of King Neptune and his cohorts.

"It was a blast," said Lance Cpl. B.T. Prieto, a close runner-up in the "Miss Sumter" contest preceding the initiation. "Now I'm ready to pass on the tradition."

"It's something I'll never forget," said Lance Cpl. D.A. France. "I'm still getting slimy stuff out of my clothes."

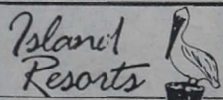

Members of the royal court of King Neptune do their best to 'clean up a Wog' during the 'Shellback' ceremony aboard the USS Sumter (LST-1181) as the crossed the equator July 12.

Staff Sgt. D. L. Hantz slashes his way through a hosedown during the 'Shellback' initiation ceremonies aboard the USS Sumter.

Lance Cpl. R. L. Lefort emerges from beneath a net-covered vat of 'slime' with a grin on his face as he nears the end of the 'Shellback' initiation.

Joe Evans details Lance Cpl. Daniel L. Spears' jungle boots while avoiding getting any polish on the green fabric.

Base boots shine due to 'Prince of Polish'

Story and photos by
Sgt. Bruce Cobbeldick

"Boots! Boots!" yells Joseph Evans, a 10-year veteran of boot-shining, who practices his trade, at Barber Shop 1-2, adjacent to the No. 5 pool here.

Evans' job may well be putting polish on footwear, but he puts a lot more than that into his work.

"If there's no gloss, there's no cost," proclaims Evans, a burly man, who says shining boots helps him keep in shape.

The extra effort Evans puts into his work is found in the smiles he brings out in his customers.

Rather than just polishing and shining the leather, Joe adds a rhythmic thumping to the process. "Hamming it up" may not protect the leather or add more luster to the shine, but the patrons leave noticeably more cheerful than when they sat down for their shine.

"The relationships I have with my customers are usually lasting ones because my goal is to keep them 100 percent satisfied. Whether they come in from the field with mud-caked dogs or their garrison boots just need a little touch up, it's my job to see that they leave standing tall," he said.

Joe, as his customers call him, has had the Commandant's boots as well as other VIP's, but Evans still favors the idea of saving anyone from fretting the inspecting officer.

In the 10 years that Evans has been "Earl of Ebony" and the "Prince of Polish," as he likes to call himself, have changed. "Nowdays, jungle are the rage and it makes my job more challenging, but that's fine. The black dye and polish off the fabric takes time, but I do it right," says, pointing to the file of gleaming boots, lined up against the wall, awaiting their owners' return.

Unlike most Marines who own two or two cans of polish, Evans purchases 36 at a time!

"Appearance is stressed here. Marine looks good, people notice do more than just Marine combat. Civilian footwear needs to be made as well and I polish shoes when they're brown, blue or red," Evans said.

"I don't give excuses. I give a shine," Evans said confidently.

A customer's boots reflect Evans' hard work as the barber shop's lights bounce off the toes.

Joe Evans claims he wears sunglasses to protect his eyes from the

FMF Atlantic tennis tourney held

Story and photos by
Lance Cpl. M.E. McLean

Open Division (all-ages), Junior Veterans Division (men 35-44) and Seniors Division (men 45 years and older).

There was plenty of rivalry between the young, up and coming hopefuls and the seasoned veterans of regional competition. Proving that age and experience can conquer over youth and spirit, Kelman and Capt. P.J. Dupre blasted their "green" competitors.

Dupre climbed steadily to the top of the loser's bracket to challenge Kelman in the championship game.

Kelman, also charged through a field of highly competitive Marine's to gain his place in the final game of champions.

In the final day of the tournament the sun was hot and provided the championship players with a fast, dry court. It was not long before Kelman was serving the small fuzzy ball up to speeds of 100 mph. Firing the yellow ball at unbelievable speeds produced a nickname for his serve, his opponents and spectators alike call it the "Kelman Cannon." Kelman fired his cannon, blowing away Dupre (6-0, 6-0) to win the match and take the FMF Atlantic Men's Open Singles Championship.

"I feel really good, but I have to start concentrating more and playing harder," Kelman said as he walked off the court after his triumphant victory.

Kelman with his coach and partner Lt.

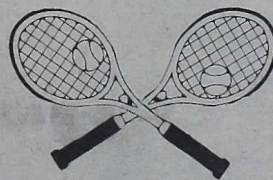

Cpl. Jeff Kelman prepares to fire the ball back to Capt. P. J. Dupre in the championship game of the tournament. Kelman is also preparing himself for the 1988 Olympic trials in Colorado Springs.

Col. R.D. Sortino also snatched the FMF Atlantic Open Doubles championship with little resistance.

Individuals and teams from Marine Corps Air Station (MCAS) Beaufort, MCAS New River, MCAS Cherry Point and Camp Lejeune were on hand to participate in the action.

The tournament, a single elimination doubles competition and a double elimination singles competition, featured Kelman in a one man show of force.

At the beginning of the tournament heavy rains flooded the courts and postponed the start of play in many of the matches. Although rain made the courts slippery, it also cooled the competitors in their heated battle. The tournament had three age divisions:

Triathlon challenges athletes

Story and photos by
Lance Cpl. M.E. McLean

A pungent salt smell came from the brackish water, as strong willed competitors waded into the tide and stood in anticipation for the whistle to start the 1988 Camp Lejeune Toughman Triathlon held at TLZ Bluebird Aug. 6.

Two-hundred and six athletes ranging in age from 17 to 53 turned out to compete in the challenging three-event competition.

The competitors were broken down into several age brackets, and the age brackets were then joined to form three groups. The groups started the first event in three minute intervals.

A three-quarter mile swim kicked off the competition and proved not only physically grueling, but mentally tiring. Most agreed that the swimming segment was the most demanding. Safety stand-bys were on hand in small boats to support the swimmers in case of emergency.

As each winded competitor stepped from the water, cheers from the spectators rang-out in support of their efforts. The "Triathletes" then charged forward to their awaiting bicycles, for a 26-mile pedal down highway 172. Race officials stood by to give the competitors cups of water and moral support for the long journey that lay ahead. Many of the bicycles used were made of special, light-weight and high performance materials, which gave some athletes the benefits of more speed and less wind resistance.

At the conclusion of the bicycle portion, the Camp Lejeune Fire Department was on hand to spray the heated racers with water, cooling them down and washing the sea-salt from their skin.

After the "Triathletes" returned from their journey, they secured the bikes and took off in stride for the third and final portion—a 10-kilometer run. The run took them along the wooded trails of TLZ Bluebird. There was a faint breeze, but the sun's heat took its toll on the runners as they battled the exhaustion that was evident by their expressions.

Petty Officer 1st Class Kevin Childre, a 26-year-old explosive ordnance disposal technician, Naval Weapons Station Yorktown, was the first competitor to cross the finish line and win the 1988 Camp Lejeune Toughman Triathlon for his age bracket, with a time of 1 hour, 50 minutes, 24 seconds.

"To win a Triathlon, you have to pace yourself or you'll burn out. If you take off to fast your energy will drain in the first or second event," Childre said. "Lejeune has a very beautiful and well run triathlon, and I really had a lot of fun."

"The run portion of the triathlon was perfect; flat and fast," said Molly Terry, a 27-year-old graduate student from Chapel Hill and the winner of the women's competition. Terry came in first with an astonishing time of 2 hours, 8 minutes, 38 seconds.

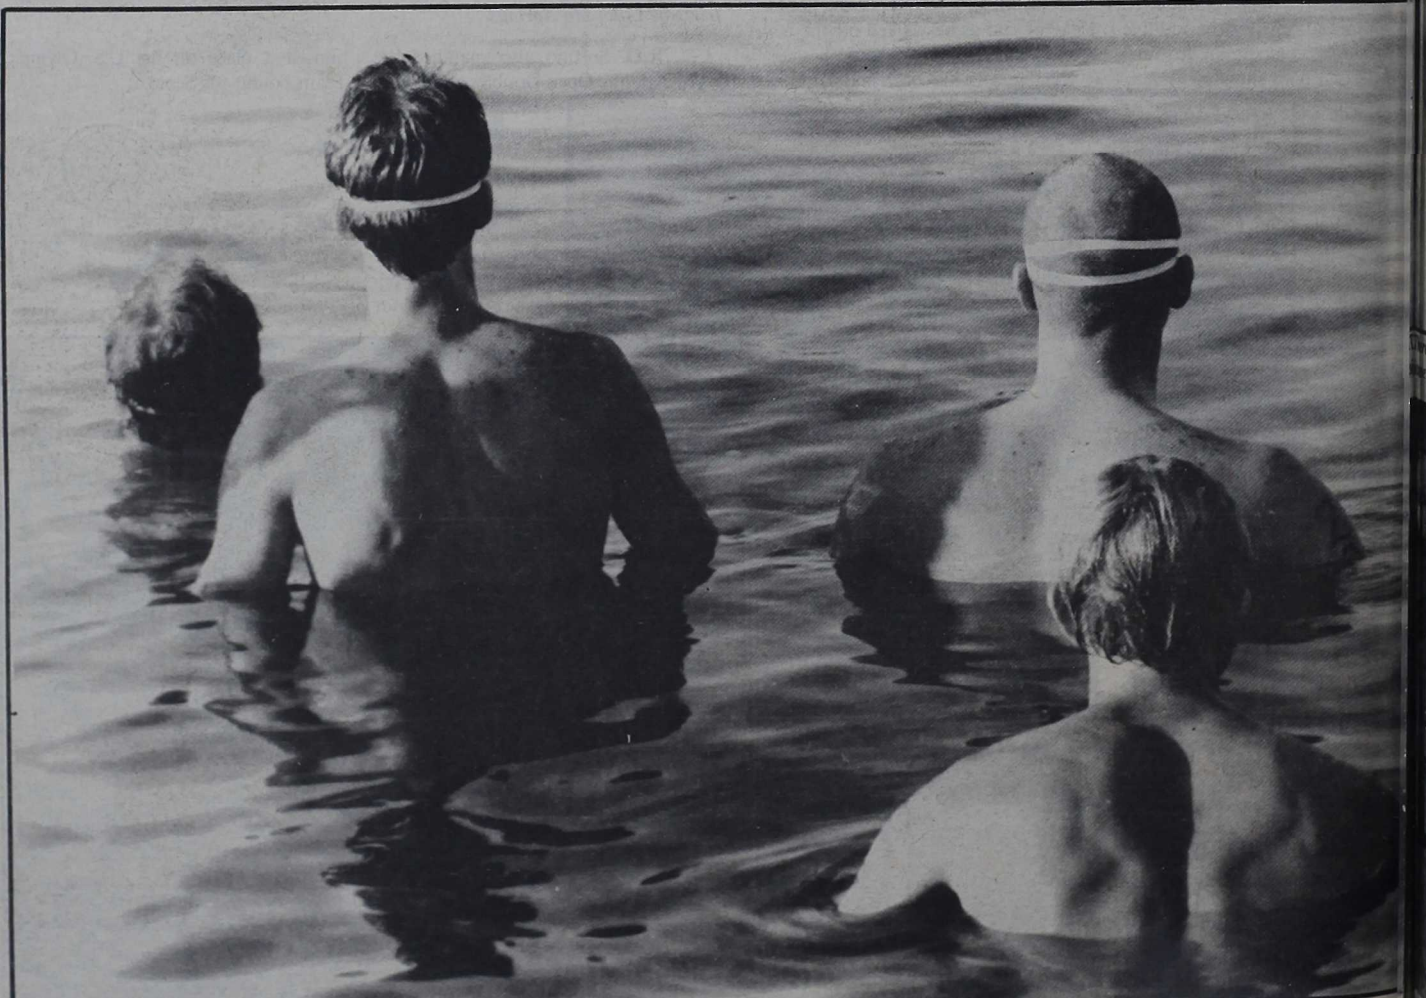

"If Camp Lejeune has a triathlon next year, you can be sure I'll be competing," Terry said.

"I have run many foot races before, but I have never felt the pain like I did running the triathlon," Master Gunnery Sgt. Bruce M. Robb, 2nd MarDiv. Photo said. "Half-way through the run portion, it was hard to breath and my knees began to get weak.

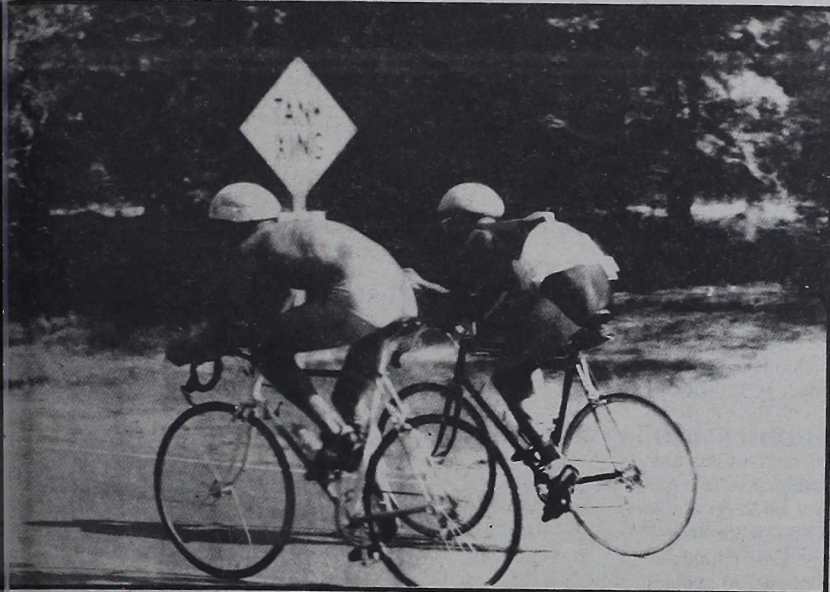

"Although I was dizzy and extremely exhausted I pushed on until I finished what I felt was a major accomplishment," he concluded.

Grabbing a timing stick at the finish line, Anderson races in with a time of 1 hour, 55 minutes and 39 seconds to take third place.

Standing in chest deep water, participants in the 1988 Toughman Triathlon wait for the whistle to start the first event, a ¼-mile swim.

Racing at speeds of more than 30 mph, the racers pedaled their way down Highway 172 in the second event of the triathlon.

Changing over from swimming gear into bicycling gear, Molly Terry moves as quickly as possible.

There was an abundance of water and Gatorade available for the thirsty competitors. The Camp Lejeune Fire Department was also on hand to spray down the hot athletes.

Spectators were on hand to lend their support to the "Triathletes" as they started off on their 26-mile journey.

Exhausted, Barry Schneiderman walks about trying to catch his breath and regain his composure after finishing the grueling 1988 Toughman Triathlon.

"Despite its short wheelbase... the Samurai handles particularly well... The casual driver will sense no top-heavy, unbalanced handling during urban errands."

Autoweek, 10/28/85

"The sure-footed feel is a big help for neophyte and experienced dirt drivers alike. In fact, the Suzuki can easily embarrass trucks three times as expensive in the dirt."

A Paradise Found

"The Big Isle"

Hawaii has been dubbed The Big Island because its 4,038 square miles make it almost twice as big as all the other islands combined. An island of incredible contrasts, Hawaii is home to fiery volcanoes and cool forests of lush fern. There is an amazing variety of climate, terrain, scenery and other things to do here. In 40 miles you can go from tropical beaches to fields of cane, up through rain forests and over black lava fields. There are superb resorts set amidst dramatic scenery, and many fine restaurants and shops. A golfer's dream, there are a number of unique and beautiful greens here. The best and the biggest of game fish inhabit Hawaii's clear blue waters and trophy size catches are always a possibility. Unique in its variety, the Big Island spells Hawaii at its best.
