MESSAGE TO THE FORCE

To the Soldiers, Airmen, and Civilian Employees of the New Hampshire National Guard,

Juxtaposed against a holiday weekend and the unofficial start of summer, Memorial Day is a solemn reminder that the freedoms we enjoy come at a dear price.

Since the Revolutionary War, 1.1 million men and women have died in service to our nation. The Civil War accounts for nearly half the fallen, World War 2 for more than 400,000.

New Hampshire's losses number in the thousands.

Since 9/11, forty-four servicemen have been added to the state's roll. They were soldiers, airmen, and Marines fighting in Afghanistan and Iraq. Four came from our own ranks: Sgt. Jeremiah Holmes of the 744th Transportation Company, Spc. Alan Burgess of 2nd Battalion, 197th Field Artillery Regiment, Sgt. David Stelmat of the 237th Military Police Company, and Cpl. Scott Dimond of Charlie Company, 3rd of the 172nd Infantry Regiment (Mountain).

Staff Sgt. Jose Pequeno of the 237th MPs nearly died after he suffered a massive head wound in Iraq in 2006. At the time, he was one of the most severely wounded American servicemen to return home from either of the wars in Iraq and Afghanistan. Now residing in Florida, the former Sugar Hill police chief continues to make remarkable progress thanks to the devotion of his mother Nelida Bagley.

The collective spirit of our fallen brothers- and sisters-in-arms, that profound sense of selfless service passed from generation to generation, continues to thrive in the men and women of this organization. Last week, Lt. Col. Tori Scarbo, an M-Day nurse with the 157th Medical Group, was among 15 Granite Staters who received the NH Hero Award for her lifesaving efforts at the scene of a car accident last year.

Earlier this month, Staff Sgt. Colin McGrail of the 237th MPs was recognized for performing his 1,000th funeral honors. He joins a select fraternity of NH guardsmen who've achieved the milestone that includes Sgt. Charles Biron, Sgt. 1st Class Cameron Holt-Corti, and Staff Sgts. Michael Avard, Patrick Combs, and Nicholas Fournier.

In February, we welcomed home the 197th Field Artillery Brigade after another successful tour as the field artillery headquarters for U.S. Army Central Command. A month later we bid farewell to a well-trained, well-led 3rd Battalion, 197th Field Artillery Regiment as it prepared to deploy to the Middle East.

The 157th Air Refueling Wing and its active associate, the 64th Air Refueling Squadron, added to their impressive KC-46 training credentials, leading a large-scale, deployment readiness exercise earlier this month in support of NATO allies in the Azores, Portugal.

The 170 NHARNG soldiers of Task Force Southeast are hitting their stride as they pass the halfway point of a year deployment on the southern border in support of U.S. Customs and Border Protection.

In March, the NHNG Biathlon Team took third place in the National Guard Bureau's Biathlon Championship, placing just behind Vermont and Minnesota. Spc. Tom Echelberger was one of just 11 servicemembers -- all from the National Guard -- who qualified for the World Military Ski Championship. Coached by Maj. Rob Burnham, the team's performance was extraordinary, considering the program had been inactive for 16 of the last 20 years.

At the same time, the NHNG Marksmanship Team "came out of nowhere" to seize third place at the U.S. Army Small Arms Championship after a 10-year hiatus from the national competition. Most impressive was their first-place finish in team pistol against 54 squads. Two months later, Sgt. 1st Class David Musso of the 3643rd Brigade Support Battalion and Tech. Sgt. Conner Cunio of the 157th Air Refueling Wing earned the "Chief's 50" marksmanship badge for finishing eighth and 10th respectively out of 247 competitors at the 52nd Annual Winston P. Wilson Rifle and Pistol Championships.

The 12th Civil Support Team helped ensure the 149th running of the Kentucky Derby, that drew more than 100,000 spectators this month, was safe and secure. In Lincoln, Nebraska, the NHNG placed 14th in the annual National Guard Marathon. Two NHNG airmen, Tech. Sgts. Christopher Ager and Amber Martine, earned spots on the National Guard Marathon Team.

Closer to home, a contingent of 18 soldiers and airmen are nearing the end of a three-month activation in support of men's state prison in Concord, marking the third time in three years the NHNG has helped offset critical staffing shortages there.

Our state partnership program continues to flourish, marked by the 39th Army Band's return to the Ilopango Air Show in El Salvador and a successful series of small unit exchanges with the Cabo Verde armed forces. Soldiers from both countries traveled to New Hampshire in February to compete in our annual Best Warrior Competition. The winners, Staff Sgt. David Jollimore of Recruiting and Retention and Spc. Brendan Tuttle of 3rd Battalion, 197th Field Artillery Regiment, earned NCO and Soldier of the Year honors.

We rekindled our cross-border training relationship with Canada, conducting field training exercises with our military police at Gagetown and Fort Devens. Two Mountain Company soldiers, Capt. Robert Matzelle and Staff Sgt Michael Avard, were among a group of guardsmen from four states who volunteered for arctic training with the Canadian military during Guerrier Nordique 23, an annual exercise in Resolute Bay, Nunavut.

As we join our fellow citizens on the last Monday in May to honor our war dead, take time to reflect on your accomplishments and that unrelenting spirit that's in each of you and in those who fought and died before us. Stay safe and enjoy time with your family and friends.

Sincerely,

Major General David Mikolaities

A combination of Uncle William and Hurricane Maria led Specialist Abner Classen of Exeter down the right path.

He came to the Granite State after his homeland of Puerto Rico was destroyed by Maria in 2017. Amid the chaos, Uncle William lived here in the Granite State and invited his nephew to join him.

Searching for his destiny, Classen combined the devastation at home with the invitation to live in the States and found his way into the selfless world of the National Guard five years ago.

“After lots of damage (from Maria), I took that as maybe a time to start over and change my atmosphere,” said Classen, who’s 26. “The circumstances made the decision easier. What’s better than being with the uncle I have always looked up to?”

Stories were everywhere Friday, from family, friends, and Guard members themselves. They packed the Capitol Center for the Arts to bid farewell to the New Hampshire Guard’s 3rd Battalion, 197th Field Artillery Regiment.

The destination and departure time were not released. The Battalion is expected to stay for at least nine months.

Guard members formed a 10-person band that included horns and drums. State officials made speeches, thanking people like SPC Classen.

The Battalion’s primary weapon, the High Mobility Artillery Rocket System, or HIMARS, can hit its target from 50 miles away. Classen will drive the trucks that place the rocket launchers in their proper spots.

He never saw this coming. At least not until he turned 21, after Uncle William had chosen to move to Texas, leaving Classen alone and unsure of his next step.

He wanted camaraderie. He wanted to help people suffering, like those in Puerto Rico after Hurricane Maria. The Guard came calling, if only in his head.

“It wasn’t until (Uncle William) went back to Texas that I knew I needed a support system,” Classen said. “I joined the Guard to create camaraderie. We support each other, and for me, that was the priority, and it’s what I was looking for.”

Meanwhile, Kai King of Manchester is an IT specialist in the Battalion. Like Classen, he had no idea what he wanted to pursue in life. He graduated with a college degree in business and then worked as an admissions counselor at Southern New Hampshire University.

There, he worked with students who had joined the Guard. One suggested that the Guard might give King the fulfillment he seemed to be lacking just two years ago.

“It was an adventure,” King said. “I thought this would change my life for the better. I’m very logical, and this made sense, to sacrifice for a greater reward in the future. It was an easy decision on my end.”

This will be King’s first deployment. Once he joined the Guard, he realized he was following others in his family. His uncle served in Vietnam. His great-grandfather fought in World War I. There were others.

“I’m walking in my family footsteps, and I never thought of it that way,” King said. “For me, it’s very exciting. A year away in a different environment, a military culture. I have great superiors who are supportive. I’ll learn from those who have already deployed. This will be a grind. You’re not going to have regular comfortable living, but this is what we are trained for and we’ll face it head-on.”

And then there’s Sgt. Jeffrey Splaine of Derry, a motor transport operator. He’s been in the Guard for nearly 10 years, since he was 19. He spent one year in the Arab Emirates and was on active duty in South Korea. He spoke about leaving his comfort zone for the sake of others. That was a common theme Friday.

“I was just looking for a challenge and something completely out of my wheelhouse,” Splaine said. “I learned about the equipment I had never seen or heard about before. I wanted to step up and do something a little bigger than just worrying about myself.”

NH NATIONAL GUARD REVIVES BIATHLON PROGRAM

By Sgt. 1st Class Whitney Hughes, National Guard Bureau

Four years ago, when Tom Echelberger, a former high school and college cross-country skier, was working in a New Hampshire ski shop, he never dreamed he would have a full-time job skiing, let alone be headed to Sweden to represent the U.S. military in international competition.

It wasn't until fate brought New Hampshire National Guard Maj. Rob Burnham into his shop in 2019 that the unlikely journey began. Burnham, at the time, aspired to revive the New Hampshire National Guard's biathlon program, which had been inactive for over 16 years.

Biathlon is an Olympic-level sport that combines cross-country skate skiing and rifle marksmanship. Within the National Guard, around 30 states maintain biathlon programs.

In 2023, the revitalized New Hampshire team took third place at the Chief of the National Guard Bureau's Biathlon Championships in Jericho, Vermont. They placed just behind teams from Vermont and Minnesota, whose programs have nearly a half-century of experience.

The New Hampshire team's success is aligned with the addition of Spc. Tom Echelberger, who enlisted in the NHNG in 2020. After a few years of work and determination, he is one of just 11 servicemembers — all from the National Guard — headed to represent the United States in the World Military Ski Championships in Boden, Sweden, at the end of this month.

"I thought to myself, skiing is in New Hampshire's DNA, and it should be part of the New Hampshire National Guard," said Burnham, the NHNG biathlon program director. "There's really a number of areas the National Guard benefits from in maintaining the biathlon training program. It's about the whole Guardsman concept. I feel that our athletes are the best we have to offer in the Guard. They are physically fit, mentally tough and dedicated to their craft and each other."

Burnham discovered his interest in biathlon competition while running at the Camp Ethan Allen Training Site in Jericho in the summer of 2019. From there, he took on the challenge of resurrecting New Hampshire's program, which had been inactive since 2004 when the demands of deployments for the Global War on Terror came to a head.

In late 2019, he was outfitting the team with equipment and frequenting Echelberger's shop.

"One day, the young man helping us in the shop stopped to thank me, and I had no idea why," said Burnham. Echelberger said he had been exploring his future and the interactions surrounding the development of the biathlon team led him to the New Hampshire National Guard.

Echelberger joined the National Guard's elite biathlon development team after his first biathlon season in 2021. That enabled him to train year-round, leading to his selection to represent the National Guard in national and international competitions.

But being a Guard member has always been about more than biathlon for Echelberger. He proudly views himself as a soldier-athlete. The day after he returns from competition in Sweden, he is headed to the Middle East for a deployment with the NHNG's 3rd Battalion of 197th Field Artillery Regiment. He will serve in his primary Military Occupational Specialty as a fire control specialist and looks forward to improving his military skills on a real-world mission.

While success has come quickly, the reactivation of the New Hampshire biathlon program was not without growing pains. After initial training and competitions began in 2019, COVID-19 restrictions significantly affected the program. But the team identified ways to stay ready for regional U.S. biathlon competitions.

After not scoring a single ranking point in 2022 at the Guard Championships in Little Falls, Minnesota, the team orchestrated the unlikely top-three finish in 2023 in Jericho, where Burnham's dream began.

"I was most excited to experience this accomplishment truly as a team," Burnham said. "Everyone supported and contributed to the same goal, and we exceeded expectations together."

Echelberger said there is a unique kinship among the Guard biathlon community. He also noted that the opportunity to build camaraderie with service members from outside his state has been valuable. He especially looks forward to competing with international military members in Sweden.

"I never thought I'd be where I am today, especially not three years ago when I joined the Guard," said Echelberger. "It's going to be an amazing opportunity out there to compete against some of the best athletes in the world. It's also a celebration of skiing and the service and commitment that all of us from our respective countries have made to those nations."

MIC DROP

By Lt. Col. Gregory Heilshorn, NHNG Public Affairs

Peter St. James retired from radio last week after a 50-year run in the business. The New Hampshire National Guard was fortunate to be a part of it.

Over the last decade and half, St. James did more to keep the NHNG relevant than any other member of the media. His weekly call-in show with deployed guardsmen, unofficially dubbed "Tuesdays With Peter," was unprecedented. It accounted for hundreds of interviews with our citizen-soldiers and airmen.

On Christmas Eve mornings, he dedicated his entire four-hour broadcast from 6 to 10 a.m. to the Guard. With the adjutant general in studio, they would chat live with our deployed. The governor and a senator or two would call in. Family members would speak directly to their loved ones overseas. The holiday shows were spontaneous and genuine. It was St. James at his finest.

Band's historical concerts at the Ilopango Air Show. He interviewed commanders and ambassadors, but always preferred talking with Joes.

St. James connected with our troops on a personal level, walking a mile in their boots on more than one, muddy occasion. Through his warm baritone, he was able to relate their experiences with a regular listenership of more than 25,000. Answering his questions on air was more like a conversation with a colleague.

Outside the booth, St. James volunteered as master of ceremony countless times for send-offs, welcome-homes, and five extraordinary gatherings in honor of our state's Vietnam veterans. Talk about going above and beyond. He even found time to record the personal stories of residents of the State Veterans Home for a special Memorial Day show.

The true measure of his impact is how many of our guardsmen consider St. James a good friend. He always had our back and for that we remain grateful.

SAVING GRACE

By Staff Sgt. Timothy Hayden, 157th ARW Public Affairs

On a hot August day last summer, Lt. Col. Tori Searbo, chief nurse of the 157th Medical Group, was driving through Greenland on the way to meet a friend, when she encountered a motor vehicle accident.

"I just happened to look up and see a little old man in my rearview mirror driving really slow," Searbo said. "Then he started drifting into oncoming traffic."

"He hit another car head-on, fortunately at a low speed," she explained. "At that point I knew I had to stop."

Using her own car to block oncoming traffic, Searbo got out and went right to the elderly driver's vehicle to check on him. Observing that the man's condition was rapidly turning for the worse, Searbo pulled him out of the car with the help of a few bystanders.

"By the time he was on the ground, he didn't have a pulse," Searbo said. "I had someone call 911, and I started chest compressions."

"Anyone who has done chest compressions knows it's not easy," she explained. "It was 90 degrees out, there was sweat pouring off me, but I had to keep doing it until EMS arrived."

Moments after the man was transported to the hospital, Searbo, an ICU nurse at Portsmouth Regional Hospital, received a group text message from her own department that warned of an elderly man coming in with cardiac arrest. Searbo contacted her colleague and gave her a firsthand account of the incident.

"I really didn't do anything that any of us wouldn't do in that situation," Searbo said.

A Portsmouth resident, she has been a nurse with the N.H. Air Guard since May of 2011, after transferring from the Maine Air National Guard.

The day after the incident, Searbo went to the hospital and visited the man whose life she saved, finding him alert and in good spirits.

She was awarded a commendation medal for her actions.

"She's a hero, there's no doubt about it," said Brig. Gen. John Pogorek, the assistant adjutant general for Air, New Hampshire National Guard. "She came in at just the right time and saved this person's life."

NH SHOOTERS EARN COVETED CHIEF'S 50

By Tech. Sgt. Charles Johnston, NHNG Deputy State PAO

Two New Hampshire guardsmen finished in the top 10 at the 52nd Annual Winston P. Wilson Rifle and Pistol Championships held in North Little Rock, Arkansas, from April 29 to May 5.

Sgt. 1st Class David Musso, a soldier with 3643d Brigade Support Battalion, and Tech. Sgt. Connor Cunio, an airman with 157th Air Refueling Wing, finished eighth and 10th, respectively, out of 247 competitors from around the world.

Both earned the “Chief’s 50” shooting badge, presented to the top 22 rifle and pistol shooters at this year’s match.

“This is a huge accomplishment,” said Sgt. 1st Class Joseph Wyner, team captain and state marksmanship coordinator. “They performed better than the vast majority of the best shooters from the Army, Air and across the nation.”

Cunio placed fourth in rifle, buoyed by impressive shooting at distances up to 600 yards. Musso demonstrated more all-around skill. He finished ninth in pistol and 22nd rifle, earning badges for both weapons.

“I am completely humbled and honored,” Musso said. “It’s something I will never forget.”

In the award’s 52-year history, the Chief’s 50 pantheon now comprises just eight New Hampshire guardsmen. Cunio is the lone airman.

Team New Hampshire, which included an Alpha and Bravo squad each consisting of four shooters, was precluded from comparable achievement. An unforeseen rules interpretation by match officials split the Granite State’s top guns between the two squads, forcing Musso and Cunio to compete separately.

The snafu also diluted other state teams. But the shake-up especially stung for a New Hampshire group on the rise since last month’s third-place finish at the “All Army” match in Fort Benning, Georgia.

Wilson Rifle and Pistol Championships awards ceremony in North Little Rock, Ark. Cunio and Musso finished eighth and 10th, respectively, out of 247 competitors at the week-long match. “There was a lot of confusion this year regarding the individual classifications,” Wyner said. “The decision to require us to shoot a different Alpha Team cost us drastically this year.”

Led with strong performances by Wyner and Musso, Alpha Team still finished a respectable 17th out of 58 teams. And though secondary squads aren’t officially ranked, Bravo Team, led by Cunio and Capt. Patrick Randall of Recruiting and Retention Battalion, placed even higher.

“Although the team composition did not go as we had planned, as a leader with the program, I am still very proud of the individual competitors and the progress they have made over the last few years of training with me,” Wyner said.

Training that has helped some students, like Cunio, outshine the master on a national stage.

“I did not think I would have reached this level so quickly,” Cunio said. “There’s always a little internal competition, but very much a friendly one. Without the support of leadership and fellow team members, none of us would be shooting at the levels we are. I’m very grateful for that.”
