Fort Irwin Garrison's Standard Operating Procedures online

BY CHARLES MELTON

Garrison Command
Community Information Manager

The days of relying on desert lore to navigate your way through the process of getting a CAC Card or reserving a post facility are evaporating quicker than a rain drop on a High Desert summer day.

For the past two months the Fort Irwin Garrison Commander's Office staff has been uploading Standard Operating Procedures (SOPs) from across the Garrison onto both the Fort Irwin Web site, www.irwin.army.mil, and the Fort Irwin SharePoint Portal, which can only be accessed by CAC-card holders.

The impetus behind the project has been Fort Irwin garrison commander, Col. James Chevallier's desire to overcome the installation's reliance on "desert lore" to accomplish common tasks such as fund raising on-post, moving household goods or registering children at the post's youth centers.

Those SOPs, which pertain to the general public, are posted on the Fort Irwin Web site, while those affecting the Fort Irwin workforce are on the SharePoint site.

Examples of SOPs on the Fort Irwin Web site include obtaining a dig permit, commercial solicitation and enrolling children in school, while examples of SOPs only on the Fort Irwin SharePoint Portal include Installation Status Reports, purchasing IT equipment and reserving the Garrison Conference Room.

One of the many benefits of the project is that all newcomers to Fort Irwin have easy ac-

Wounded Warrior Program

BY ALEXANDRA HEMMERLY-BROWN
Army News Service

WASHINGTON — The U.S. Army Wounded Warrior Program gained a new director Tuesday — one who has a lot in common with those he'll be leading.

Lt. Col. Gregory D. Gadson, a West Point graduate, lost both of his legs to a roadside bomb in Iraq in 2007. Despite nearly losing his life, Gadson went on to complete two graduate degrees and recovered with assistance from the Wounded Warrior Program, which he is now responsible for.

The Wounded Warrior Program, nicknamed AW2, is the official Army program that assists and advocates for the most severely wounded, ill, and injured Soldiers, veterans, and their families.

"It's all about the Army making good on its promise to never leave a fallen comrade," said Brig. Gen. Gary H. Cheek, commanding general for the Warrior Transition Command, which AW2 falls under.

Gadson replaced AW2 director Col. James S. Rice, who spent three years at the post. Jokingly, Rice handed Gadson his Blackberry smartphone during the handover ceremony.

"I think having been wounded and having grown up in the AW2 program, it's given me a certain lens that not many have had ... I have that patient perspective and hopefully I can communicate those experiences to make the organization better," Gadson said.

Gadson made a splash in national media in 2008 when the New York Giants adopted him as a good-luck charm and source of inspiration, taking them all the way to the Super Bowl.

Gadson, who played football at West Point with Giants wide-receiver coach Mike Sullivan, received a visit from Sullivan during his recovery at Walter Reed Army Medical Center. When asked if there was anything he needed, Gadson asked Sullivan to see the Giants play when they came to Washington. When the Giants came to town, Sullivan took him up on his request and asked Gadson to say a few words to the team before the game. They won, breaking the Giants out of a losing streak.

Gadson continued to attend Giants games and motivate the players all the way up to the Super Bowl, which Gadson and his family were invited to attend. The Giants called him their inspiration, but Gadson said he was the one who felt honored to be included as part of the Giants' team.

Since then, Gadson has also been recognized for being the first person to receive the latest version of battery-powered "bionic" prosthetic knees, called Power Knees.

Cheek, who had advocated for Gadson to replace Rice in the position, was emotional during the change-of-authority ceremony.

"Wow, what a day for the Army," Cheek said choking back tears, "because the Army Wounded Warrior Program brings home today one of their own. What a great message that sends ... it tells our wounded warriors that 'if it's possible for him, it's possible for me.'"

Gadson said he is honored and humbled to be selected, yet maintains that he plays a small part in a bigger picture.

"This is not about me, this is an opportunity to continue to serve those who have made huge sacrifices for our nation, and we owe that to them," Gadson said. "If I allow myself to think about it, I can become emotional, because I know where I was three years ago, and this certainly wasn't on the horizon at that point for me."

Lt. Col. Gregory D. Gadson, a West Point graduate, lost both of his legs to a roadside bomb in Iraq in 2007. Despite nearly losing his life, Gadson went on to complete two graduate degrees and recovered with assistance from the Wounded Warrior Program, which he is now responsible for.

Pentagon's cost savings

Acquisition reform plays key role

BY LISA DANIEL
American Forces Press Service

WASHINGTON — The Defense Department has the opportunity to save billions of taxpayer dollars through acquisitions reform, but only if it grows its workforce with the right federal workers in place to oversee contracts, a senior Pentagon official said today.

"There is a significant opportunity to save billions of dollars, but only if we have a well-trained and sufficient workforce," Shay Assad, the acting director of the department's procurement and acquisition policy, said during a Senate Budget Committee hearing.

Assad called acquisitions reform and improved efficiencies a top priority of Defense Secretary

Robert M. Gates, with a goal of $100 billion in savings over five years, starting in fiscal 2012. He said the secretary ordered his staff to consider two questions with regard to old-style contracting procedures: Is this respectful of the American taxpayer at a time of economic and fiscal duress? And, is this the best use of limited dollars?

With cost savings derived from better efficiencies, Assad said, department officials hope to attain 2 to 3 percent net growth in warfighting capabilities without a mirrored budget increase.

Earlier this month, Ashton Carter, undersecretary of defense for logistics, "directed all echelons of the department to take a hard look" at ways to cut costs, Assad said. Carter's directive, he said, "really was about increasing the buying power of the department and in getting a better deal for taxpayers."

"We need to examine not only what we acquiring, but how we are acquiring it," Assad added.

The department procured three million contracts in fiscal 2009, amounting to $375 billion, Assad said. It spent $372 billion in contracts last year, he said. About 53 percent of those costs, he said, go to contracted services, while 47 percent go to products, such as equipment.

Overall, the entire federal government, including defense, spent $560 billion in fiscal 2009, according to Daniel I. Gordon, administrator of federal procurement policy in the White House's Office of Management and Budget, who testified alongside Assad. That compares to $535 billion the government spent in fiscal 2008, Gordon said, adding that this year's amount would have been much larger without major cost-cutting initiatives.

Agencies are now pooling their purchases, using more fixed-price contracts, having Internet-based "reverse auctions" for contracts, and paying more attention to contract management, Gordon said. The result, he said, is a drop in annual contract growth that averaged 12 percent every year between 2001 and 2008, to an average of 4 percent since then.

During that time, Gordon

Thanking America's support across country

STORY AND PHOTOS BY
SGT. GIANCARLO CASEM

11th ACR Public Affairs

The Wounded Warriors Family Support's High Five Tour made a brief stop at the National Training Center on Fort Irwin, Calif., July 12.

The High Five Tour was spearheaded by John Folsom, a retired Marine colonel. Folsom, driving a custom-painted Shelby Mustang Cobra, has logged thousands of miles and given countless high-fives.

"As a veteran of multiple combat deployments as a Marine, I wanted to personally thank and 'high five' as many of my fellow Americans as I can during my three-week 10,000-mile tour of our great country," Folsom said.

Folsom started his trip in Nebraska and headed east and hit major metropolitan cities such as Chicago, New York, Boston and Washington, D.C. Folsom said the object of giving high fives is to personally thank everyday people for their continued support.

"We want to thank Americans for supporting its military families. The outpouring support and devotion to our military over the past seven years is nothing but outstanding," he said. "We want to make Americans aware that Wounded Warriors Family Support is ready to support and serve our military families."

The Wounded Warriors Family Support is a charity organization whose aim is to provide support to Families of service members who have been killed or injured. The organization provides support financially and is also able to send families to retreats and resorts to help heal some of the emotional and psychological scars.

During Folsom's stop at the NTC, he was greeted by Command Sgt. Maj. Martin Wilcox, 11th Armored Cavalry Regiment regimental command sergeant major. Wilcox introduced Folsom to a few Soldiers who were given high fives. Folsom thanked the Blackhorse Troopers for their service as well as their Families' sacrifices.

The Soldiers then signed Folsom's car, which is adorned with signatures from people around the country. After the trip, the car will be auctioned and the proceeds will go to service members' Families in need of support.

The car has helped Folsom garner attention to his cause. Sgt. Aaron Hernandez, Headquarters and Headquarters Troop, 1st Squadron, 11th ACR, said it was the car that originally caught his attention.

"I'm not much of a Ford guy," he said. "But I always wanted to drive a Shelby."

Hernandez, a native of Rancho Cucamonga, Calif., added that he appreciated Folsom's efforts.

"It's a good morale booster to see someone campaigning for the wounded warriors," Hernandez said.

John Folsom looks on, July 12. Folsom stopped at Fort Irwin during his High Five Tour to meet with and thank Soldiers for their hard work. At the end of his trip, the car will be auctioned and the proceeds will help support wounded service members' families.

New Army health program ...

Bringing holistic approach to health, wellness

BY JESSIE MAXWELL

Army News Service

WASHINGTON — Commanders charged with addressing the physical, emotional and spiritual needs of Soldiers and families have a new “tool” that focuses all available installation resources on those needs.

The Health Promotion Coordinator Program provides trained professionals to synchronize installation health and wellness programs. The coordinators are assigned to garrison support staffs, but are hired and trained by the U.S. Army Public Health Command (Provisional).

“Our goals are to make the community aware of health and wellness resources and — through installation Community Health Program Councils — to ensure that we all work together on issues such as suicide, substance abuse, financial problems, and marital problems,” said Jo Huber, health promotion coordinator at Fort Campbell, Ky.

At Fort Campbell, this holistic approach to making services easily available and mutually supportive began in June 2008. Currently there are seven HPCs at continental United States installations (the others are at Fort Lewis, Wash.; Fort Carson, Colo.; Fort Bragg, N.C.; Fort Bliss, Texas; Fort Hood, Texas; and Fort Drum, N.Y.), and four more are being recruited. Huber said the hope is to have HPCs at all Forces Command installations by October of this year.

“The program provides commanders with a blueprint for integrating services,” Huber explained. “It allows the leadership to maximize their strategic capabilities to drive their public health initiatives for a more mission-ready force.”

In plain language, “maximizing” can mean identifying gaps in services, while reducing stove-piping and duplication of effort, as well as harnessing what already exists. The HPC program also stimulates communication and teamwork among the installation experts who provide Soldier and family services.

That was Fort Campbell’s experience.

“We found once this process was in place, that it reduced the stove-piping and duplication of effort among different chains of command, Huber said. “At Fort Campbell, we have a very cohesive community with all (the groups) working very closely together.”

Huber said flow of communication is one of the biggest benefits that has come from the Community Health Promotion Council.

“The flow of communication of all the programs we have has definitely helped our tactical commanders understand how those programs fit together,” Huber said.

She said this understanding allows the programs to help the Soldiers and their families more effectively, and for subject-matter experts to collaborate and better use available resources.

Huber and her HPC colleagues also facilitate working groups associated with the Community Health Promotion Council. At Fort Campbell, the working groups Huber facilitates are incorporated into the Comprehensive Soldier Fitness Program, which targets overall well-being and resiliency. Two working groups, the Suicide Prevention Task Force and Installation Prevention Team, were in motion before the Community Health Promotion Council was created.

“What we have done here is invited those two working groups to be a part of the council, where they actually brief out their initiatives (on a monthly basis) to the community health promotion executives,” said Huber.

The health promotion executives are the garrison commander, medical commander and chief of staff. The teams also brief to senior commanders on a quarterly basis.

The Community Health Promotion Councils themselves are part of the Army’s Health Promotion program, an Army G-1 proponentcy.

The councils were first launched by U.S. Army Europe in 1997, in an effort to pull together existing community programs that work with emotional, spiritual and family wellness groups, according to Walter Morales, Army Suicide Prevention Program manager.

Fort Irwin's rock-steady monument

Painted Rocks area preserves military history

BY CANDICE JAMOLES AND SGT. GIANCARLO CASEM

NTC Protocol Officer

11th Armored Cavalry Regiment Public Affairs, respectively

Although rock painting dates back to prehistoric times with cave paintings, the military has kept the practice alive and well.

The tradition of rock painting among military units continues at the National Training Center at the colorful, larger-than-life structure known as Painted Rocks on Fort Irwin Road, just outside the gate of this High Desert military installation. Painted Rocks has become one of the NTC's most noticeable landmarks, easily identifiable as an outcrop of boulders piled on top of each other. Most rocks, if not all, have their granite faces painted over with unit insignias, crests and mottos.

Soldiers with Army National Guard and Reserve units first began painting their units' names and symbols at Painted Rocks sometime between the late 1940s and late 1950s, according to Neil Morrison, director of the NTC and 11th Armored Cavalry Regiment Museum.

Morrison said the first "painted rock" included a picture of an alligator. It is located on the back side of Painted Rocks and cannot be seen well, because it has been painted over, he said. According to Morrison, during the late 1940s and 1950s, Painted Rocks became a gathering place for Soldiers and their instructors.

"[Painted Rocks] was used as the place for Soldiers to congregate, train and take classes," he said. "The majority of [them] would take classes on the back side. The hill was used as an amphitheater."

After Fort Irwin's designation as the NTC in 1980, active-duty units started to paint their unit identifiers at Painted Rocks following their training rotations. The practice continues today, but now painting on the rocks is regulated.

Units at the battalion level or higher, which have completed a training rotation at NTC, are allowed to paint a rock. Regulations require that units provide their own rocks, since the ones at Painted Rocks have all been used. Units must indicate the rock's proposed color and design and whether they will be painting on a new rock or simply updating an existing image.

Visitors to the museum on Fort Irwin are informed about the importance of preserving the images at Painted Rocks — to help keep alive a special part of Fort Irwin's history — Morrison said. Painted Rocks has helped tell the story of NTC and even the U.S. Army through the years, added Morrison.

Recently, a new boulder was incorporated into the collection at Painted Rocks. The rock received an image that was a break from the traditional unit logo.

"We have a tradition at the National Training Center of painting rocks with unit patches and insignias; symbols of pride and allegiance," said Command Sgt. Maj. Victor Martinez, the NTC and Fort Irwin command sergeant major. "In celebrating one of America's greatest assets, the NCO Corps, the backbone of the American army, today, we commemorate a painted rock to recognize 2009 as the Year of the Noncommissioned Officer."

Headquarters and Headquarters Troop, 2nd Squadron, 11th Armored Cavalry Regiment, obtained a rock that was painted by two Soldiers from F Troop of the same squadron. Spc. Ryan Ferreira and Pfc. Michael Sharpe created and painted a design that symbolized the significance of the Year of the NCO. The representation shows an eagle, the U.S. flag, and a Revolutionary War-era Soldier holding a musket. The rock was unveiled at a ceremony Aug. 7, 2009, at which Martinez said, "We are a Corps of innovative competent professionals capable of leading, training and motivating the most diverse teams in the most unpredictable of environments."

As the first and last landmark people see as they come and go from Fort Irwin, Painted Rocks now host a symbol as steadfast as the NCO Corps itself, the "Year of the NCO" rock.

said, there was no expansion of the federal workforce to oversee the "tsunami" of contracts coming through. Over the next several years, the Obama administration is investing in hiring thousands of new federal procurement officers, the "lifeblood" of acquisition reform, he said.

To improve the procurement of services, Assad said, the defense department also must expand competition, move away from longstanding "incumbent" contractors, ensure that work statements are understood, and use proper contracts.

With regard to weapons systems, Assad said, "It's all about properly defining the requirements." Contractors now are "spending a lot of time up front" to ensure that contracts are realistic to avoid future add-on costs, he said.

In the past, defense procurement officials spent too much time measuring processes rather than outcomes, Assad said. And that, he said, is where expanding the workforce with highly trained acquisition professionals comes in.

The Pentagon plans to add 20,000 federal procurement workers over the next five years, Assad said. Among other things, he said, the additional workers are needed to properly oversee contracts "from an arm's length."

The department is making good progress, having already hired 4,600 acquisitions and procurement workers, Assad said. Many of the workers, he said, are former servicemembers who'd used the equipment and services they will now help to procure.

Protect self, others from extreme summer heat

SAN BERNARDINO COUNTY PUBLIC HEALTH

News Release

SAN BERNARDINO — San Bernardino County Public Health Officer Dr. Maxwell Ohikhuare has issued an extreme heat advisory for San Bernardino County, due to high temperature forecasts for inland and desert regions. Residents are urged to take precautions that will prevent heat-related illness.

Some health conditions such as obesity, fever, dehydration, heart disease, poor circulation, sunburn, and drug and alcohol use can make it harder for the body to stay cool in hot weather. While the heat advisory is in effect, follow these steps:

Get plenty to drink

- Drink more water, juice and sports drinks
- Avoid drinks with caffeine (tea, coffee and cola) and alcohol
- Talk with your doctor first if you take water pills, or are on a low-salt diet

Stay cool indoors

- Stay in an air conditioned area, if possible
- If you don't have air conditioning, go to a public building or shopping mall for a few hours – dial 2-1-1 to ask about Cooling Centers near you, or visit the website at www.coolingsb.org.
- A cool shower or bath is also a good way to cool off

Wear light clothing and sunscreen

- Choose lightweight, light-colored and loose-fitting clothing

- A wide-brimmed hat will keep your head cool
- Use sunscreen with a sun protection factor (SPF) of 15 or higher and reapply every two hours while in the sun (all skin types)

Schedule outdoor activities carefully

- Try to be less active during late afternoon, the hottest part of the day
- Rest often in a shady area
- Never leave kids or pets in a parked car

Pace yourself

- Take frequent, regularly scheduled breaks
- If your heart pounds or you get out of breath, lightheaded, weak, or feel faint, stop your activity and rest in a cool or shady area

Use a buddy system

- Check on your friends and family and have someone do the same for you
- Check on the elderly and people with health conditions twice a day during a heat wave
- Warning signs of heat illness include heavy sweating, cramps, headache, nausea or vomiting, tiredness, weakness, dizziness and fainting. Take steps to cool the body. Drink cool, non-alcoholic beverages, take a cool shower, bath, or sponge bath. Seek an air-conditioned place. Wear lightweight clothing.

Editor's note: For more information about extreme heat, visit www.bepreparedcalifornia.ca.gov.

Diet & Exercise

'Can you have one without the other?'

BY SANDY CLARK
Coyote Activity Center Fitness Coordinator

Is it possible to only diet and lose weight? Can you only workout and keep off those unwanted pounds?

So many people hate to exercise. They think by cutting their calories they will lose the pounds. They just might, but the key lies in keeping the pounds off. The National Weight Control Registry reports that only 5 percent of dieters keep the weight off. Most regain a third of the weight within a year's time and all of it back within three years.

While dieting will help you lose those pounds, its exercise that keeps you physically fit! Exercise keeps your heart happy! (You can be skinny fat you know?) So having a combination of them both is the key. Combining the two can get a little complicated. You have to eat enough to fuel your body so that you may have the energy to workout. However, eating too much will cause you to gain weight. Just because you are working out, doesn't mean you can eat what you want.

Many people get to their magic number and think that is it. They think it's unnecessary to watch their diet or exercise any longer. So not true. Once you reach that ideal weight, you must maintain it. It's not going to happen by itself, that's what gets you there in the first place. You must stick to the plan. A less intense plan, but you still need to maintain a controlled nutrition and exercise plan.

It's a lifestyle! Embrace it! Watch what you eat, exercise regularly, drink your water, and you'll make that goal in no time!

As always consult your doctor before started any workout/weight loss program.*

Football, Cheer Camp

Football players, cheerleaders meet the pros, beat the heat

Offensive Line/Defensive Line Coach

It was hotter than Hades last Friday and still 65 Fort Irwin youth showed up at CYS Field to participate in a Football and Cheer Camp conducted by the pros and staff of CSI Football.

At its conclusion, the probing question asked by Daniel Robinson, a wide receiver with the Green Bay Blizzard, was “Did you learn anything?” and the answer was a loud and enthusiastic, “Yes!”

“Did you have fun?” was the next question and again the answer was “Yes!”

The audience was some 40 youth football players who braved 116-degree temperatures for three hours to hone their skills and learn some technique. The girls did as well and with no complaints.

But, unlike the CSI of TV fame, this CSI doesn't solve crimes. This CSI stands for Coaching Solution Innovations. It's the brainchild of its owner and founder, John “Tex” Williams, who wanting to promote safe and player-friendly football practices in the High Desert and surrounding areas, formed his unique company three years ago.

This most recent camp at Fort Irwin was his third. “And it won't be our last,” he added, as he handed out free T-shirts to the participants.

“Our motto is that every kid is a winner. There is no losing, no pressure, no criticism.” Coach Williams explained.

“Everything we do is about building up the young athlete and about creating a positive experience that not only enhances their athletic skills but prepares them for life's challenges.”

It is the life challenges to which Williams alluded that explain why CSI brings a champion to their camps and not just any champion, but a Super Bowl champion. Only a few can lay claim to that distinction and Chris Hayes is one.

The former defensive back for the Green Bay Packers is someone who overcame a boatload of challenges to make it to Washington State, then to the NFL, having first to grow up and succeed in the rough and tumble neighborhoods of San Bernardino, CA.

“It was football that set me straight, that got me motivated about academics because I wanted to play after high school. I was blessed with talent but I wouldn't be here today without the discipline and commitment I learned from my football coaches.”

CSI also brought in Bari Yonkers, formerly of the Arizona Cardinals, and Harmony Hunt, of the Los Angeles Clippers, who conducted a two-hour cheer clinic for 25 young cheerleaders.

Yonkers is the co-founder of the “Sweethearts for Soldiers” organization that is comprised of current and former professional cheerleaders who travel the world to boost the morale of our troops and show our appreciation and support of their work and sacrifices.

“The clinic was a great success. The girls were highly motivated and already well coached. It was a lot of fun and a great experience for everyone,” she said.

(LEFT) Former NFL player Chris Hayes, and assistant Al Harper, autographs a Green Bay Packers helmet for Child, Youth, and School Services Youth Sports Program.

Despite the oven-like temperatures for both the football campers and the cheerleaders, the camp was in the words of Tom Gilbert, the FMWR's Youth Sports director, “The most impressive I've ever seen.”

Or as one happy camper asked, “Can we do this every day?”

The answer, sadly, is no, not every day but definitely again next year for one day and hopefully under the lights.

A special thanks goes out to three Fort Irwin contractors — PACE, Curran/Servtech, and Dryke — whose gracious donations greatly reduced the cost of the event for all military dependents.
