Trusty Shellbacks

Shellbacks initiate more than 3,000 Pollywogs.

A MESSAGE FROM THE ANCIENT DEEP

“It was an honor to preside as King Neptune. More importantly, this was an incredible experience for our warfighters to be a part of a time-honored tradition that, one day, they will share with the next generation of Sailors.”

Nimitz-class aircraft carrier USS George Washington (CVN 73) and embarked staff and air wing completed a “Crossing the Equator (Line)” ceremony after Neptunus Rex, the mythological ruler of the seas, boarded the ship with his Royal Court while the ship navigated across the equator into the globe’s southern hemisphere May 12.

The boisterous ceremonies of “Crossing the Line” are age-old traditions practiced by Sailors crossing the equator. Dating back to the Middle Ages, these events were intended as a test for the crew to determine if novices on their first cruise could endure life at sea.

During present day crossing ceremonies, Sailors pay homage to Neptunus Rex as the experienced Shellbacks initiate Pollywogs – first-time “crossers” – with a series of tests that includes Naval knowledge, maritime abilities, and physical and mental toughness. Once complete, the Pollywogs stand before King Neptune and his Royal Court to be deemed worthy and earn the title of Trusty Shellback.

Custom and tradition dictate that the oldest and most distinguished senior Shellback member of the crew presides in appropriate garb as King Neptune. George Washington’s Executive Officer Capt. Jason Tarrant carried the distinction as Neptune for the event.

“It was an honor to preside as King Neptune,” said Tarrant. “More importantly, this was an incredible experience for our warfighters to be a part of a time-honored tradition that, one day, they will share with the next generation of Sailors.”

Davy Jones, the official messenger for King Neptune, boarded the ship prior to the ceremony and informed the crew when to prepare for the Royal Party. George Washington’s Command Master Chief Randy Swanson, who held the position as Davy Jones, spoke of the long-standing tradition.

“Crossing the line and becoming a Shellback is a significant experience in a Sailor’s career,” said Swanson. “Executing this ceremony during an already historic deployment is an amazing opportunity for the crew.” George Washington is deployed in support of Southern Seas 2024 and crossed the equator in her voyage to circumnavigate South America.

Southern Seas 2024 is an operation which seeks to enhance capability, improve interoperability, and strengthen maritime partnerships with countries throughout the U.S. Southern Command area of responsibility though joint, multinational, and interagency exchanges and cooperation.

“Executing this ceremony during an already historic deployment is an amazing opportunity.”
