Pioneering IT advancements at Army Sustainment Command

ROCK ISLAND ARSENAL, Ill. – In the ever-evolving world of information technology, U.S. Army Sustainment Command’s Information Management, or G6, directorate stands out as a driving force behind technological innovation and efficiency. With nearly two decades of experience supporting ASC, Terry Johnston, an IT specialist in the Enterprise Operations Division, has played a pivotal role in enhancing the command’s IT capabilities.

JTL III: Leadership lessons, laughter, and life-changing connections

ROCK ISLAND ARSENAL, Ill. – Participating in U.S. Army Sustainment Command’s Journey to Leadership Tier III program felt like entering a new realm of possibilities – equal parts exhilarating and full of unexpected growth opportunities. As a relatively new supervisor, I came into the program with enthusiasm but also plenty of questions about how to lead effectively. Thanks to JTL III, I’ve gained not only clarity but also confidence in navigating the complexities of leadership, with tools and insights that have reshaped my approach. \(Click to read more\)

Two reasons why 405th AFSB sexual assault response coordinator is excited about 2025

KAISERSLAUTERN, Germany – Laiza Correa Sboron said she’s very excited about 2025. The sexual assault response coordinator with the 405th Army Field Support Brigade is excited about the new year for two reasons – the Army’s first standalone regulation for sexual harassment and assault response and prevention came out Feb. 10, and the Army is celebrating its 250th birthday this year.

Supporting fire: Stabilizing firepower in a swamp

The year was 1966, and for several years the Soldiers in Vietnam had been using the same howitzer that their fathers had used in World War II. The M101 (known in World War II as the M2) was a 105-mm howitzer that was known for its accuracy and destructive power. So, why, in the middle of a war in the jungle, was the Army changing these well-known and tried-and-true fire breathing monsters with a lighter M102? (Click to read more)
