LANCE CPL. CORY D. POLOM

The new building replaces the one that burned in a 2007 fire. It will house the commands of Marine Corps Air Station Cherry Point and the 2nd Marine Aircraft Wing, and is tentatively scheduled to open in January.

Cherry Point air station will have a new Building No. 1 when the new base headquarters building is complete.

The new 84,000-square foot, $21 million structure is the replacement for the headquarters building that was destroyed in a 2007 fire.

The old building was Building No. 198 and was built during World War II.

"Building numbers are sequential based on when they were built, but since the original building is long gone, they made the arrangements to make this one No. 1," said Keith Willis, construction manager for Naval Facilities Engineering Command, who is overseeing the project.

Housed in the new building will be 120 personnel from Cherry Point's headquarters and about 338 personnel from the 2nd Marine Aircraft Wing. Other departments to be housed will include personnel from the offices of public affairs, comptroller, inspector, surgeon, chaplain, safety and aviation logistics.

"They were scattered around all over the place before the fire and even more scattered after the fire," Willis said.

The old building was smaller at just under 60,000 square feet and wasn't big enough for all the necessary personnel. The new building is large enough to house them under one roof.

In addition to ample space, Building No. 1 will have two large conference rooms.

There will be a ceremonial lobby with a grand staircase facing the parade ground with artwork and memorabilia on the walls that was salvaged from the old building.

There will also be a 10-foot-long wall built from brick salvaged from the old building.

The architect is HBA Associates, of Norfolk, Va., with the general contractor being PCL Construction Services Inc. of Orlando, Fla., and Charlotte. About 160 workers have been constructing the building since groundbreaking in October 2009.

The project also includes reconstruction of the wooden footbridge in front of the building with a masonry version. The new bridge will be built and the flagpole repositioned to line up with the front of the structure and Second Avenue.

Building No. 1 was designed as a high efficiency "green" building using recycled building materials, low emission materials, high-efficiency heating and air units, low-ultraviolet windows and solar panels on the roof. About 50,000 bricks are part of the structure.

MASP program refreshes adult academic skills

CPL. SAMUEL A. NASSO
MCAS CHERRY POINT

Many adult students who start college after being out of school for a few years feel rusty in basic subjects such as math, english and writing.

Marine Corps Community Services' Lifelong Learning Program has partnered with Craven Community College to offer the Military Academic Skills Program, which is an educational program intended to improve the competency of active-duty enlisted personnel in the areas of reading, mathematics, communications and writing.

Service members who successfully complete the MASP will return to their occupational specialties better prepared to perform and enhance their unit's mission. Additionally, service members will be better prepared to begin exploring higher education alternatives.

"This course will help build competence and confidence for the Marines for their respective military occupational specialties and will help them build study habits to better prepare them for going back to school," said Teresa H. Allen, Lifelong Learning Division education services officer.

It's a three-week course, and classes start at 7:30 a.m. and end at 4:30 p.m. each weekday at the training and education building (Building 4335). The next available classes are: Sept. 13-Oct. 1, Oct. 4-22, and the final class of the year starts Oct. 25 and ends Nov. 6.

"After being denied a lateral move for not having the required score of 105, I turned to the MASP class to help me," said Sgt. Allen T. Scott, data noncommissioned officer in charge for Marine Unmanned

Hazardous materials require proper disposal

CPL. RASHAUN X. JAMES
MCAS CHERRY POINT

Some Marines and family members have called the Environmental Affairs Department aboard the air station with concerns about where they can dispose of their household hazardous waste and electronics.

While attending a local Coastal Environmental Partnership meeting, Rick Weaver, an environmental scientist with the Environmental Affairs Department on Cherry Point, received a brochure detailing a series of household hazardous waste and electronics collection days open to residents of Carteret, Craven and Pamlico County.

The hazardous materials accepted for disposal include latex and oil paints, used motor oil, lawn and garden fertilizer, pesticides, gasoline, drain openers, paint thinners, cooling oil, anti-freeze and batteries.

Electronics accepted include computers, television picture tubes, televisions, used cell phones and other electronic waste from households only, no commercial sources.

"Disposing of hazardous waste is a pretty common problem in households in our surrounding area," Weaver said. "These opportunities are rare, and we want to let people know there is a way for them to get rid of these hazardous materials safely."

Weaver went on to speak about the potential dangers of hazardous materials entering the ecosystem.

"If these materials are not disposed of properly there is the potential for it to end up in surrounding streams," Weaver said. "Once it ends up there it has the potential to harm the wildlife. There is also the risk of these materials soaking into the soil and doing significant long-term harm."

In a separate but related incident, some Marines and their family members were concerned about hazardous waste being poured down kitchen sinks. The primary substance being poured down the sinks was usually cooking grease.

Atlantic Marine Corps Communities strategic marketing manager Dixie Lanier spoke about the dangers of this practice.

"We try to help educate our residents about these issues," Lanier said. "Many of them are young and may not know what not to pour down their drains. Pouring substances like cooking grease down the drain can cause the piping to thin and eventually can cause the entire plumbing system to become compromised, causing structural and environmental damage."

Lanier stressed that if residents have any questions about what to do with any hazardous materials they should call the AMCC's maintenance department at 866-509-2424.

From the Chaplain: Monti's Bolt

Lt. JAMES RAGAIN
MALS-14 CHAPLAIN

Eugenio Monti was an elite Italian Olympic bobsledder during the middle of the 20th century. He won 10 World Championship medals and six Olympic Medals. However, his best known act in his career was not a run that he had on the bobsled, but rather an act of sportsmanship that most likely cost him the gold medal.

During the 1964 Winter Olympics, Monti found himself in a tight competition for first place in the two-man bobsled event with the British team led by Tony Nash. After Nash completed his first run, he made a devastating discovery. His sled had a broken bolt on the rear axle. This one broken bolt would have put the British team out of the competition. When Monti heard what was going on, he quickly removed the bolt from the rear axle of his sled and sent it to the top of the hill. Nash's team attached the bolt to their sled and then completed their final run down the mountain, winning the gold medal.

Monti's team took the bronze.

What a great example of humility and selflessness. Monti's act in 1964 captures the message of humility found in Philippians 2:3-4 which reads, "Do nothing out of selfish ambition or vain conceit, but in humility consider others better than yourselves. Each of you should look not only to your own interests, but also to the interests of others."

Monti made some tough decisions on that cold winter day. He could have allowed the British team to be disqualified and likely could have taken home the gold or silver medal. However, he pushed aside thoughts of selfish ambition and considered the situation that Nash found himself in. He also could have exalted his act of sportsmanship by telling people that the British team won because of him. However, when asked about his act of sportsmanship, Monti simply said, "Tony Nash did not win because I gave him a bolt. Tony Nash won because he was the best driver." For his actions on that cold winter day, Monti became a recipient of the highest Olympic award, the Pierre de Coubertin medal; an award given to those athletes who demonstrate sportsmanship at the Olympic Games.

Not a bad example to imitate.

Legal Assistance: F-R-E-E that spells free

CAPT. ZACHARY D. SPILMAN
JUDGE ADVOCATE, 2ND BN, 9TH MARRINES

It's never a good idea to take financial advice from a guy in a television commercial who sings an annoying song about a "free credit report" – especially when it's bad advice.

A credit report is information about your credit history that is collected for the purpose of determining your creditworthiness, or how much of a loan you can be trusted to repay. Organizations that collect this information are called consumer reporting agencies, and they sell the information to potential creditors.

The Fair Credit Reporting Act is a federal law that strictly regulates the conduct of these agencies and the use of the information they provide. This act is one of the most powerful consumer protection laws in the country.

The three biggest consumer reporting agencies are well known: TransUnion, Equifax and Experian. However, smaller companies that collect data on consumers could also fall under the regulation of the FCRA.

The FCRA requires consumer reporting agencies to make consumers aware of the information in their records, and provide an opportunity for dispute and correction of inaccurate information. This is accomplished by obtaining a free credit report, and the federal government has established a website to get this information.

Unfortunately, private companies take advantage of this fact and try to get people to pay for something that should be free. If you listen carefully to the television commercials for a "free credit report" you will hear that the offer applies with enrollment in an additional program which usually carries a hefty fee. One popular website charges $14.95 a month for this "service."

The best place to get your no-kidding free credit report is: <http://www.annualcreditreport.com>.

This website is authorized by the federal government to comply with a 2003 amendment to the FCRA. It provides free reports from the three major reporting agencies. Because we are all entitled to one report per agency each calendar year, I like to request one report from a different agency every four months, giving me a picture of my credit rating throughout the year.

Of course, getting your report is only the first step to correcting or repairing your credit history.

Adverse material on your credit report comes from many places: information furnished by mortgage or car loan companies, court judgments and credit card records all contribute to your credit report. If any information on your credit report is inaccurate, you need to notify the agency that provided the credit report, in writing.

Once a reporting agency receives notice of a dispute, it must investigate the situation to determine if the information is accurate. If the creditor can't prove the accuracy of the information, or if the notice is considered frivolous, it must be removed from your credit report. Once removed, negative information can't be added back to your credit report without written notice to you within five days.

Additionally, if you dispute information on your credit report, the reporting agency must respond to you, in writing, within 30 days. If the dispute results in a change to your report, you are entitled to another free copy of the report. You can also request that the agency send a copy of your corrected credit report to your creditors.

Even if you can't get negative material removed from your credit report, you can add a statement explaining what happened. This should be written carefully, since it will be provided to anyone who checks your credit report before giving you credit.

There are many resources on-station that can help you resolve credit problems. Marine Corps Community Services has financial counselors available to help you manage your finances, and Legal Assistance attorneys can help you fight a dispute with a creditor or credit reporting agency. Of course, these services are all free of charge to eligible service members and their dependants.

But whatever you do, don't just blindly follow the advice of the guy in the commercial.

Walk-ins are accepted weekdays at 7:30 a.m. in the Joint Law Center, Bldg. 219, and appointments can be made by calling 466-2311.

Continuing Promise Marines, Sailors end humanitarian expedition in Costa Rica

CPL. ALICIA R. GIRON

CONTINUING PROMISE

LIMON, Costa Rica – Marines and Sailors of the Special-Purpose Marine Air-Ground Task Force Continuing Promise 2010 made friendships and partnerships through hard work in Costa Rica providing humanitarian support to the communities, Aug. 20-30.

“It was an honor being able to see Marines working with Costa Ricans and exchanging knowledge with one another,” said Lt. Col. Chris S. Richie, commanding officer of Special-Purpose MAGTF Continuing Promise. “The Marines played a key role in the overall success of the mission in Costa Rica, and I am incredibly pleased with their performance.”

Marines not only conducted subject-matter expert exchange with Costa Rican police officers, but also served as translators for the medical sites, provided construction and manpower through engineering expertise and participated in community relation activities at schools to assist non-government organizations.

“It makes me proud to be a part of a humanitarian mission in this country,” said Sgt. Kenneth L. Gutierrez, native of Miami, Fla., and crewman of Company A, 2nd Assault Amphibian Battalion. “I have family in this country and it’s an honor to be able to help them. I feel this is why I became a Marine ... to help the hearts and minds of people.”

Marines from the logistic combat element of the special-purpose MAGTF joined hands with Navy Seabees in construction at two Costa Rican schools. The Marines and Seabees installed chain-linked fences, rebuilt roofs and painted the inside and outside of classrooms.

For 10 days, approximately 20 Marines worked at the schools building a better environment for more than 450 students at Hone Creek School and 30 students at Westfalia School.

Navy Capt. Thomas M. Negus, commodore of Continuing Promise 2010, said the service members did more than just fix roofs and paint walls.

“We have been building relationships and that’s the important thing,” said Negus. “The relationships and partnerships we make during Continuing Promise is very important to us.”

While Marines worked at medical sites and engineering sites, Marines from Company A, 2nd AA Bn., specialpurpose MAGTF conducted a seven-day subject-matter expert exchange with Costa Rican police officers and coastguardsmen at El Murcielago training camp on the Pacific coast of the country.

Costa Ricans worked with Marines in learning Marine Corps Martial Arts, non-lethal weapons tactics, familiarizing with aircraft takeoffs and landings, and humanitarian aid and disaster responses.

“Being a U.S. Marine is patriotic, but it’s also having a kind heart and helping out our neighbors,” said Gutierrez. “It’s good to show them our capabilities and how we can help them, and maybe one day they’ll do the same for us.”

For many Marines and Sailors, this was their first time in Costa Rica. Continuing Promise 2010 gave them the opportunity to meet the Costa Rican people and learn about their way of life.

“Our work has been given meaning by the people we have met,” said Negus. “We have truly seen the beauty of Costa Rica with our eyes, but we have truly seen the beauty of the Costa Rican people with our hearts.”

During operations in Costa Rica, Richie and Negus assisted the U.S. ambassador to Costa Rica at the medical, engineer and community relations sites in Costa Rica.

“I want to take this opportunity to thank commodore Negus and the crew of USS Iwo Jima for coming to Costa Rica and working so diligently in making Continuing Promise mission a success,” said Anne S. Andrew, the U.S. ambassador to Costa Rica. “It’s been rewarding to see what Continuing Promise mission means to Limon, and we look forward to continuing our promise in the future.”

September 11, 2001, the United States was baffled as four planes were hijacked by terrorists who caused this nation to be flipped upside down for days. Two of the planes were flown into the World Trade Center, one into the Pentagon and one crashed in a field, which devastated the country and left many Americans with a loss for words.

In acts of honor and heroics hundreds of firefighters were called in and entered the burning towers to rescue as many people they could, with some never to return.

"For hours after those towers collapsed all you could hear was the sound of the motion detectors we wear, going off signaling that there was no motion from the firefighter who wore it," said Gunnery Sgt. David A. Stone, training staff noncommissioned officer for Station Aircraft Rescue and Firefighting. "We have been telling our Marines this all day as we prepared for this training exercise."

More than 15 ARFF Marines conducted night fuel fire training at the Cherry Point fuel pit Sept. 10 just a day before the anniversary of the firefighters who courageously sacrificed themselves while reacting to the attacks on the World Trade Center.

"We do this training at night because the air station doesn't shut down during the night," said Stone. "They fly planes here all day every day, and it is our job to be there if the worst happens."

The Marines with ARFF were briefed, and then set into groups to fight the three fires that their command had scheduled.

"We have more than 500 gallons of fuel for the Marines to burn tonight, and I want them to work on their basics," said Stone.

After all the fires were out and the Marines had full accountability of gear, they circled around Stone as he gave them some things to think about as they left for the weekend.

"In less than 24 hours it will have been nine years since the biggest loss of firefighters ever in our history," said Stone. "As you all go about your weekend, remember the more than 300 of our fellow firefighters that gave their lives to save the people of 9/11."

MANAMA, Bahrain – At approximately 5 a.m. local time, Sept. 9, 24 Marines from the 15th Marine Expeditionary Unit's Maritime Raid Force aboard USS Dubuque operating under Combined Task Force 151, boarded and seized control of the M/V Magellan Star, a German-owned vessel registered under the flag of convenience of Antigua and Barbuda after pirates attacked and boarded the vessel early Sept. 8.

This successful mission by Combined Maritime Forces secured the safety of the ship's crew and returned control of the ship to the civilian mariners. Nine pirates are currently under control of CTF 151, pending further disposition. This ship's crew has not reported any injuries or casualties. There were no reported injuries from the U.S. Maritime Raid Force.

The CTF-151 flagship, TCG Gökçeada, a Turkish frigate, was the first ship on scene, responding to a distress call received from Magellan Star, Sept. 8. Two additional warships assigned to CTF-151, USS Dubuque and USS Princeton arrived in the vicinity of the attack to provide support to Gökçeada.

Turkish Navy Rear Adm. Sinan Ertugrul, commander, CTF-151 said, "Units from the multinational maritime force, under Combined Task Force 151, are actively engaged in anti-piracy operations. This regional problem, truly, has global impact and we are completely committed to bringing the disruptive acts of piracy to an end. # Thank-you sent from Canada

August 27, 2010

Dear Sir/ Madam,

My name is Margaret Menczel. I live in Toronto, Canada. This summer my cousin from Hungary came to visit. This was her very first trip to North America. I wanted to show her Ottawa and some other parts of Ontario.

During our trip to Ottawa, walking back to the hotel from an afternoon of sightseeing, we happened upon some activity on Parliament Hill. Fortissimo was about to begin. My cousin had never seen anything like this before and was excited to see so many regiments dressed up, marching and playing.

Then around the corner we noticed the U.S. Marines. She was elated! She never imagined in her wildest dreams she would ever in her lifetime see the U.S. Marines in person and certainly not on a trip to Canada.

Fortissimo was spectacular! The performances were outstanding. Everyone did a wonderful job.

Toward the end of the performances we noticed two U.S. Marines watching the performance with the other spectators. They looked very handsome in their uniform. I approached them with my cousin and sister. I asked if I could have my picture taken with them. They very enthusiastically said, 'Most definitely' and 'Absolutely.' They were both very friendly and polite.

This experience was most definitely the highlight of our trip! Please extend my thanks and appreciation to the two Marines for their kindness.

Thank you,
Margaret Menczel

American, British aviation teams thrive as partners in Afghanistan

CPL. RYAN RHOLES
3RD MARINE AIRCRAFT WING (FWD)

CAMP LEATHERNECK, Afghanistan – On the morning of June 1, the United States Marine Corps' 3rd Marine Aircraft Wing (Forward) and United Kingdom's Joint Aviation Group integrated under one command. Brig. Gen. Andrew W. O'Donnell Jr., the 3rd MAW (Fwd) commanding general, led a historical flag raising ceremony with his British counterpart, Group Capt. Nick Laird, the JAG commander.

Since then, the two forces have been operating in unison under O'Donnell's authority, as the sole aviation combat element of Regional Command (Southwest) – the command responsible for operations in Helmand and Nimroz provinces. They have completely pooled their resources and manpower in order to support the missions across one of the most dangerous and influential regions in Afghanistan.

"As two separate organizations, we both have strengths," said Laird, "but combined we have exceptional agility to react to a very determined enemy and insurgent campaign."

The JAG brought more than 30 rotary-wing aircraft to 3rd MAW (Fwd)'s collection of aviation platforms. Both forces now contribute everything from light attack helicopters to cargo and troop transport aircraft in order to support the Afghan National Security Forces and coalition service members throughout the province.

"We have the additional resources to support the ground forces in a far more comprehensive way than we previously had in this part of the country" said Laird, who has been deployed to Afghanistan several times over the years. "I think with the number of aircraft we bring to the table, and the number of aircraft [the U.S.] brings to the table, we get synergies and efficiencies. I strive for what is intelligent tasking – making the best use of our aircraft. Basically, 'sweating the metal'— ensuring we don't have empty helicopters flying around the battle space. That's working very well and we're seeing efficiencies on a daily basis."

Under the new unified leadership, the larger aviation combat element has taken advantage of economies of scale across multiple mission sets. The U.S. and U.K. aviation forces are simultaneously pounding the enemy with firepower from attack aircraft, while replenishing supplies and sustainment to ground troops. Perhaps even more importantly, the integrated air wing directly affects counterinsurgency efforts by moving Afghan government officials across the battle space, linking the country's people with their governing leaders. Together they coordinate a wide range of supporting efforts - from agricultural and school supplies to reconstruction and development materials. Later this month, U.S. Marines, their U.K. partners and Afghan National Security Forces will plan and coordinate air support for the national elections.

Afghanistan's scorching temperatures in the south and mountainous terrain in the north make flying these combat missions enormously complicated. One would think that adding new aircraft and different aviation terms would create even more complex problems for the two commands. But the U.S. and U.K. forces quickly synced together and made the transition flawless.

Maj. Gen. Richard Mills, commanding general of Regional Command Southwest, thanks maintainers, aircrew and pilots with the U.K.'s Joint Helicopter Force (Afghanistan) during a tour of the unit's flight line at Camp Leatherneck, Afghanistan, Aug. 7. Mills spoke with many of the junior service members and thanked them for their hard work and professionalism. JHF(A), along with U.S. squadrons under the 3rd Marine Aircraft Wing (Forward), provide everything from assault support to cargo delivery for Afghan National Security and NATO forces in Helmand province.

"I'm awestruck by the professionalism and dedication on both sides of the Atlantic, down to the most junior enlisted," said O'Donnell. "It really makes you feel good when you see people as dedicated to the mission all the way through the ranks."

The ranks are seamless, according to the general.

"We are totally integrated. Here at the operational level as a wing headquarters, we have more than a dozen staff officers who work inside of, and are incorporated with, the wing," said O'Donnell. "It's very important to note that these British members of our team are not liaison officers — they are action officers. They are staff officers who work side by side with the 3rd MAW staff."

U.S. and U.K. planners on staff with 3rd MAW (Fwd) have already coordinated more than a dozen named operations since the integration. One of the most publicized was Operation Tor Shezada, or Black Prince, in which U.S. CH-53E Super Stallions with Marine Heavy Helicopter Squadron 466 inserted more than 100 U.K. ground forces into the Nad-e Ali area, where they partnered with ANSF and U.S. Marines to clear the area of the Taliban threat. Another more complex mission, Operation Big Iron, involved several U.S. and U.K. aircraft teaming up to transport everything from troops and cargo to howitzers and humvees into the mountainous Kajaki Dam area. Months after the initial troops and supplies were airlifted into the area, U.K. and U.S. Marine aviators are still providing logistical and fire support to their ground brethren operating at Kajaki. The successful execution of Operation Big Iron stands as a testament to the combined accomplishment of the two aviation units' planning and dedication to the overall mission.

"Our communication is phenomenal," said U.K. Maj. Dan McBride, an operations and future planning officer with 3rd MAW (Fwd), adding that the U.S. and U.K. personnel thrive on the close relationship they've built. "We work in close quarters, and sharing a sense of humor and banter helps build that trust and improve communication — it creates a synergy."

U.S. Marine Maj. John Jaeski, a 3rd MAW (Fwd) planner who works with McBride, said the Marines appreciate the friendship, and the benefits will reciprocate for years to come.

"Coming here and working with the British means that, in 15 years or so, when today's officers become tomorrow's generals, the relationship between the U.S. and U.K. will be that much stronger because we have a better understanding of how we work and appreciation for each other," he said.

The services are learning from each other in all sorts of ways. In late June, the U.S. Marines tested a new capability to drop emergency supplies of water and ammunition to troops without having to land and put the aircraft in danger. They used low-cost, low-altitude parachutes to float bundles of water to the ground, testing methods of keeping the cargo safe and delivering on target.

By early August, the JAG was using the lessons learned from the U.S. tests to experiment with the concept using its CH-47 Chinook.

"This theater really creates an appropriate environment for [aerial delivery] because of the restricted [ground] movement," said McBride. "We started looking at what the U.S. was doing and found it was working well, so we took that concept and built on it."

McBride added that the U.K. is hoping to share information as well, as they try to bring in aviation tactics and weapons instructors to work with the American pilots.

Outside of the headquarters, it's now common to see U.K. personnel on U.S. aircraft; U.K. medical aircraft and teams racing in to rescue troops, regardless of nationality; and U.S. and U.K. aircraft teaming up on missions as escort, overwatch, close air support, or troop and cargo transport. With the exception of the different colors in their uniforms and helicopters, it's difficult to tell these teammates apart. This partnership can really only be truly described as "one team, one fight."

"The relationship between the U.S. Marine Corps and U.K. aviation is a very long and illustrious one," Laird said with a proud smile as he sat back in his chair staring off into the hallway where images of U.S. and U.K. aircraft adorn the walls. "That relationship is forged through blood and sacrifice over almost 100 years and has never been stronger than it is right now."

The unquestionable competency of both national forces can be seen on a daily basis through consistent success on the battlefield.

Marines keep things rolling as Hornets arrive for exercise Southern Frontier

LANCE CPL. JENNIFER PIRANTE
MARINE CORPS AIR STATION IWAKUNI

ROYAL AUSTRALIAN AIR FORCE BASE TINDAL, Australia – A few hours passed before the pilots of Marine All-Weather Fighter Attack Squadron 224 touched ground in the rugged outback of Australia's Northern Territory all the way from Marine Corps Air Station Iwakuni, Japan.

Ordnance, aircraft technicians and logistical personnel, forward deployed the week prior, stood by to catch the jets and begin conducting procedures to quickly disarm them.

VMFA(AW)-224 already knew the plan. Maintainers were briefed on all the procedures, personnel were kept informed of flight schedules, and cooperating units stood by to provide all the logistical support the pilots needed.

RAAF Base Tindal also provided VMFA(AW)-224 with logistical support for the landing, in addition to aircraft refueling services, meals, working and living accommodations during the exercise.

The mission was to make the arrival of the VMFA(AW)-224 pilots go as smoothly as possible with seamless integration into preparation for the next mission.

VMFA(AW)-224 pilots landed at RAAF Base Tindal, Australia, for exercise Southern Frontier last week.

Southern Frontier is an annual, bilateral training exercise hosted by the RAAF to afford Marine Aircraft Group 12 Hornet squadrons the opportunity to focus on offensive air support.

"The flights went great," said Capt. Jeffrey G. Dean, VMFA(AW)-224 pilot. "Everything went smoothly."

Now that the birds have landed, pilots will have to rely on ground maintainers for the management and coordination of aircraft arrival, turnaround and launches.

"Flying definitely puts hours toward the life of the aircraft," said Dean. "When we move the jets, we have to bring all of our maintenance support. No matter where we are, the jets still require periodic inspections and work."

According to ordnance and aircraft technicians of VMFA(AW)-224, settling in and getting networks set up was tough, but the real work began when the birds landed.

"Once the pilots get in, everyone goes to work," said Cpl. James Sawyer, ordnance technician with VMFA(AW)-224.

Ordnance was the first section to see the birds and check for hot breaks.

When ordnance was done doing their checks, the other sections within VMFA(AW)-224 must do theirs to ensure the complete maintenance of the aircraft.

Fixed-wing aircraft safety equipment mechanics performed their inspections, which are vital to the safety and well-being of the pilot.

"Our job is to ensure the seat is in perfect condition," said Lance Cpl. Danielle Kaitchuck, a VMFA(AW)-242 fixed-wing aircraft safety mechanic. "We make sure there are no loose wires, foreign object debris, and make sure the shielding mild detonating cord lines aren't burnt or broken. It has to allow the pilot to eject safely from the aircraft and survive."

When it came time for the aircraft to launch again to conduct familiarization flights in the area, maintainers were called upon to perform safety inspections on the aircraft.

Over the next few days, personnel spent hours turning the jets around to comply with upcoming flight schedules and close-air support missions for exercise Southern Frontier.

VMFA(AW)-224 pilots spent a few days prior to the exercise gaining familiarization of Australia's Northern Territory, including the Delamare Range Facility where the squadron will be conducting close-air support missions.

"A lot of electrical checks have to be conducted before pilots can drop bombs," said Sawyer. "When we apply a specific type of bomb family to an aircraft, we have to do a check for that specific bomb family."

"That involves doing checks every day," he added.

There is much to look forward to the next few weeks as the Marines work with the Australians.

"I am definitely looking forward to making use of the airspace and ranges here," said Dean. "The Northern Territory of Australia is pretty remote. There is a lot of open airspace to fly and train," he added.

Southern Frontier is a chance for the two nations to exercise and enhance training relationships with all participating personnel.

A COMMUNITY REMEMBERS

Cherry Point community, nation commemorate 9th anniversary of Sept. 11 terror attacks

LANCE CPL. BRIAN ADAM JONES
MCAS CHERRY POINT

Across the country Saturday, a nation remembered the ninth anniversary of a day that has not only lived in infamy, but rocked the foundations of peace and catapulted countless service men and women toward war. The community of Marine Corps Air Station Cherry Point, N.C., found its own way to remember.

The community commemorated the hallowed day in different ways. Members of Annunciation Parish in Havelock, N.C., held the second annual Holy Rosary Crusade, where parishioners joined for dance, song, prayer and food. Also, roughly 350 miles away from the air station, Cherry Point Marines paid tribute to one of their own.

Elements from Marine Aerial Refueler Squadron 252 traveled to West Chester, Pa., to honor a former Marine in their squadron who was a victim of the terrorist attacks on Sept. 11, 2001. Mike Horrocks served as a pilot with VMGR-252 almost 20 years ago, and to the Marines of VMGR-252, once you are a member of the squadron – you are always a member of the squadron.

Horrocks died on Sept. 11, 2001, while serving as the co-pilot of United Flight 175 that crashed into the World Trade Center.

More than 30 Marines from VMGR-252 conducted a flyover Saturday at the University of West Chester, Horrocks' alma mater. Horrocks was a football legend at the university, and Saturday the university immortalized him with a statue and a scholarship in his honor.

Lt. Col. David C. Morris, the commanding officer of VMGR-252, spoke at the ceremony. Morris said VMGR-252's role in the memorial was important to call attention to the values Horrocks held dear, values that Morris said were intrinsically reflective of his squadron.

"I talked about the example he set that still reflects on the Marines of today," Morris said. "Dedication, answering a higher calling, teamwork. Those are the things we want to call attention to. Those are the things Mike stood for."

While Morris and his Marines honored their own in the Philadelphia area, back in Havelock, retired gunnery sergeant Sally C. Kelley, now a civilian employee with the Cherry Point facilities directorate, led fellow parishioners at Annunciation through the rosary, fighting through tears when she referenced 9/11.

Kelley said she remembered being a career planner at Marine Aviation Logistics Squadron 14 that fateful day nine years ago and could not believe her ears when she heard the news over the radio.

"Since I retired in January of 2002, every year on Sept. 11 I always go to church or light a candle at home and say a prayer in remembrance of the pain and suffering endured by those who lost loved ones," Kelley said.

Morris summed up his feelings – "It is vitally important to remember. That day was the start of everything we're doing now. It was the genesis of the war on terrorism. That day defined our squadron."

"STEP UP 3D" (PG-13)

"Step Up 3D" is a movie about dance, music and the performing arts. In this film, a tight-knit group of street dancers team up with a New York University freshman. They find themselves pitted against the world's best hip hop dancers in a high-stakes showdown that will change their lives forever.

Adam Sevani ("Step Up 2 The Street") appears again in the recurring role as the refreshing and stand-out character, Moose, the NYU freshman. Moving from Baltimore to New York, he joins a street dance community that is called the 'House of Pirates.'

Among the group of raw and passionate underground street dancers who team up with Moose are Luke and Natalie, played by newcomers Rick Malambri and Sharni Vinson.

Reprising their previous roles are Alyson Stoner ("Step Up") as Camille, who is Moose' best buddy; and TVs Glee Harry Shum Jr. ("Step Up 2 The Streets") as Cable.

Also appearing are Ally Maki as Jenny; Christopher Scott ("17 Again") as Hair; and runner up to "So You Think You Can Dance" Stephen "iWitch" Boss ("Hair-spray") as Jason.

Director Jon M. Chu ("Step Up 2: The Streets") uses every 3-D trick in the book for this third installment of the popular dance series. He acquired some of the best top finalists dancers from the popular television show, "So You Think You Can Dance," and one the show's judges, Adam Shankman, is also producer of this film.

If you are a fan of this dance series, you will remember the 2006 original "Step Up" with Channing Tatum.

The movie has a rather simple and predictable storyline but brings intense and incredible dancing sequences, featuring the music of Flo Rida, among others.

"Step Up 3D" is a fun movie to watch and is dedicated to all the fans who enjoy dancing in any form or fashion; however, the 3D concept is overrated and the film could have done better without it.

"THE AMERICAN" (R)

"The American" is a suspense thriller about an assassin who hides out in Italy for one last assignment.

George Clooney ("Up in the Air," "Michael Clayton," "Syriana") stars as Jack, a ruthless and efficient professional assassin, who is also a proficient gun craftsman.

Jack is a lone American abroad, a hit man who is constantly on the move and who is always alone, never safe for very long.

Now, Jack is contemplating quitting his dangerous job of killing, after a job in Sweden ends a little too harshly.

Under the pretense of being a nature photographer for a magazine, he retreats to a small medieval town in the Italian countryside, keeping a low profile, and is relishing on being away from death.

While enjoying the peaceful and quiet time in this idyllic setting, Jack takes on one last assignment from a mysterious contact named Mathilde, played by Thekla Reuten ("In Bruges").

Jack also makes friends with the local priest, the all-knowing Father Benedetto, played by Paolo Bonacelli ("Mission Impossible III"), and enters into a torrid liaison with a beautiful woman, Clara, played by Violante Placido ("Another Life").

Jack and Clara develop a deep romantic bond, one seemingly free of danger, but one that could complicate his final mission.

By stepping out of the shadows, Jack is tempting fate.

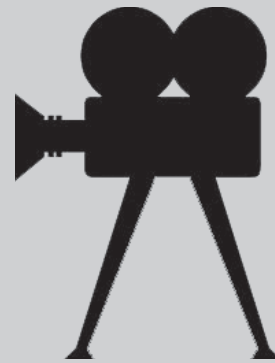

Also appearing is Johan Leysen ("Moonlight") as Pavel and Irina Bjorklund as Ingrid.

Director and former famous portrait photographer Anton Corbijn ("Control") gives this standard action flick, adapted from the novel A Very Private Gentleman by Martin Booth, a special European touch.

His trained eye for the beauty of the picturesque Italian countryside stunningly transforms to the big screen.

Clooney is stepping out of his charming shadow to play the brooding and dark character brilliantly and with great maturity.

"The American" is an artsy foreign thriller telling a tense tale with great restraint and distinct European flare.

"GOING THE DISTANCE" (R)

"Going the Distance" is a romantic comedy that takes a look at the trials and tribulations of a long distance relationship.

Drew Barrymore ("Whip It," "Music and Lyrics") stars as Erin, a journalism grad student and aspiring newspaper reporter from California.

Justin Long ("Funny People," "Drag Me to Hell") stars as Garrett, a struggling music executive from New York.

The two meet during an internship in New York City, the sparks fly and lead into a six-week summer long fling.

But when Erin has to return to California and Garrett stays behind for his job in New York, the two are struggling to keep their long distance relationship going.

With the help of texting and sexy late-night telephone calls from coast to coast, Erin and Garrett stay connected and find love.

Despite time-zone differences, jealousy and a few temptations along the way, the smitten duo might just prove everyone wrong and actually go the distance.

Co-starring are Charlie Day ("Bad Company") and Jason Sudeikis ("Semi-Pro") as Garrett's friends, Dan and Box, who do not want to lose their drinking buddy to another rocky romance.

Christina Applegate ("Employee of the Month") appears as Corrine, Erin's up-tight and over-protective sister, who wants to protect Erin from heading down the wrong path.

Also appearing are Ron Livingston ("Dinner for Schmucks") as Will; Jim Gaffigan as Phil; Rob Riggle as Ron; and Peyton List ("Remember Me") as Kaley.

Documentarian Nanette Burstein ("American Teen," "The Kids Stay in the Picture") makes her feature debut with this non-traditional and awkward comedy.

"Going the Distance" is a light, low-key and sometimes funny comedy about long distance relationships that show a realistic modern dilemma.

Can Johnson rebound again, or is it anybody's Chase this year?

When it was all said and done in the post-race interviews at Richmond International Raceway Saturday night, Clint Bowyer did about the best job of summing up the prevailing sentiment heading into the 10-race Chase for the Sprint Cup.

He said the four-time and defending champion Jimmie Johnson is still the favorite, but may not have the edge he's had in recent seasons.

"Superman has not lost his cape, but it's shorter than it was in years past," Bowyer said. "So hopefully we'll all be able to give him a run for his money this year."

Carl Edwards also pointed out the obvious - that Johnson and his No. 48 Chevrolet team at Hendrick Motorsports have an uncanny knack for bouncing back from a mediocre midseason and performing at their peak when the title is on the line. Still, Edwards said, there are other teams that have shown championship-level performance in the races leading up to the Chase.

"I feel like Jimmie [Johnson] has had an unbelievable ability to perform in the Chase and win championships," Edwards said. "But I think all of these [Chase contenders] would agree that it's anyone's race more than ever this year. It looks like advantages are smaller and they last a shorter period of time ..."

"But I wouldn't be surprised if Jimmie comes out here and goes off and wins the first three or something and proves us wrong, but I don't believe he'll do that."

The driver and team poised to give Johnson one of his strongest challenges is the No. 11 Toyota team of driver Denny Hamlin, who won at Richmond, his home track, and was on pace to win the week before at Atlanta, only to be sidelined with a blown engine. Because of his six regular season wins and the bonus points they paid, he starts the Chase as the points leader. Hamlin's crew chief Mike Ford said that his team actually started playing its Chase hand a couple of weeks ago.

"We started a little early," Ford said. "We needed to get some momentum going into the Chase. We felt like we stumbled a little bit, but we wanted to get aggressive and make sure that we come out swinging after that off-weekend and we did that."

"We went to Atlanta and sat on the pole and ... we had some momentum and turn-around and had an engine failure in the race. We knew coming to Richmond, we could rebound and kind of gain that back."

"So it's kind of been up and down, but I think we gained some momentum moving into the Chase and put some ground behind us. We have never been the points leader, so we are still going to race like we are 40th, still going to stay aggressive."

Johnson said he sees plenty of drivers with teams performing well enough to give him a run for his money. He has Carl Edwards, Kyle Busch and Kevin Harvick on his short list and is looking at others, too.

"I think you've got five or six cars that can really race for the championship," he said. "I don't know how to handicap it or who to fear the most because everyone has it in them."

Jeff Gordon, who is winless on the season as he starts his quest for a fifth Cup title, said it's a little early to be picking championship favorites.

"Most of that starts to show itself four or five races into the Chase, and that's kind of the way I feel about it right now," he said. "Yeah, maybe there's no clear-cut favorite right now, the way the past 26 races have gone. But I've seen how the team that really is going to go win this championship seems to be pretty clear ... four or five races into the Chase, and I wouldn't be surprised if that happens again this year."

NOTEBOOK

Kenseth: Unlikely to repeat '03

Matt Kenseth, the driver whose 2003 run to the Sprint Cup championship has been cited by many as the reason the Chase format was adopted, isn't predicting a repeat of his results from seven years ago.

In '03, Kenseth won the title with one win and an average finish of 10.2. He finished the season with a 90-point advantage over runner-up Jimmie Johnson despite a blown engine and a 43rd-place finish in the season finale at Homestead-Miami Speedway.

This year, he's winless so far and has rarely been a contender for victory in the 26-race regular season. Still, his finishes were consistent enough to earn him a Chase berth.

He said his chances this year aren't as good as he'd like them to be.

"I think it depends how we start," he told reporters at Richmond on Saturday. "If you look at the first 26 races, everyone will sit up here and tell you they have a chance for the championship and mathematically that's true, but not if we run like we did for 26 races."

"It seems like we average usually around a 12th place finish, and certainly that's not going to win the championship over 10 races."

Childress teams all in for Chase

Last year, no drivers at Richard Childress Racing made it into the Chase. This year, all three RCR drivers will run for the title.

Jeff Burton, who will be in the Chase along with teammates Clint Bowyer and Kevin Harvick, said much of the credit for the turnaround - which actually began in late 2009 - goes to team owner Childress.

"Last year was a frustrating year for all of us, and I'm proud of what Richard did to get more prepared for this year," Burton said. "Our sponsors and our employees and our fans and everybody deserve the kind of effort that was given. Hopefully one of us can pull it off."

"It's been a long time since Richard has won a Cup championship, and it would mean a great deal to get one back for him."

Chase allows no 'mulligans'

Tony Stewart, who has won Cup championships under both the season-long and the Chase formats, said winning a title today is as much about what you don't do as what you do.

"You're not going to be able to have bad races," he said. "You're not going to be able to get a mulligan ... You're going to have to be good for 10 straight weeks."

"You don't have that flexibility with this field to have an off night."

'Something new' fails for Dale

Dale Earnhardt Jr. has three career Cup wins at Richmond International Raceway, but on Saturday night he wasn't even close to being a contender. He finished 34th, six laps off the pace.

"That was one of my worst performances. I believe," he told reporters afterward. "We were trying something new and it just didn't work out ..."

"We ran a rear spring package we've never run before, front spindles we've never run before; just trying to find something to help us get better. Running like we've been running all year long ain't good enough, so we figured we'd try to go in a different direction, and it was a bad choice tonight."

"We're going testing on Monday, and we'll do as much testing as we can do the rest of the year to figure out what's wrong and to get a package that will work."

Can a new points system better reward drivers who win?

ASK RICK!

"With five of the 12 drivers in this year's Chase winless so far this season, is there a points system out there that would place more emphasis on winning races and put more winners in the Chase?"

A: One of the best systems around is one that was first proposed by the late David Poole, the longtime motorsports writer for the Charlotte Observer.

Under the Poole system, a driver's first win of the regular season would carry a 500-point bonus. If Poole's system was applied this year, the results might have been different because teams and drivers might have gambled more to win races and there might have been some different winners, which isn't a bad thing, but as it stands, the Chase field would include every driver who has won a race this year and one non-winner - Jeff Gordon.

That would eliminate the awkward situation of having a Chase without the driver, Jamie McMurray, who has won the Cup circuit's top two races, the Daytona 500 and the Brickyard 400.

It would mean that non-winners Carl Edwards, Jeff Burton, Clint Bowyer and Matt Kenseth would miss the Chase, while race winners Ryan Newman, Juan Pablo Montoya and David Reutimann would make the field along with McMurray.

Under the current system, the most points a race-winning driver can earn is 195, and that's if they also pick up the five-point bonus for leading the most laps in a race. At Richmond on Saturday, race-winner Denny Hamlin earned 25 more points than runner-up Kyle Busch, who got 170 and did not pick up any points for leading laps. Drivers now get five bonus points for leading at least one lap.

Each race win in the regular season now translates to 10 bonus points once the Chase starts, which is why Hamlin vaulted from ninth to first heading into Sunday's race at New Hampshire.

As for the Chase itself, many have suggested that the 12 drivers who compete for the title over the final 10 races of the season should have a points system all to themselves. That would eliminate the issue of one bad finish essentially taking a driver out of championship contention. If the Chase drivers had their own points system, a Chase driver who wrecks or blows up early in a race would get 12th-place points, which would keep them in championship contention far better than a 40th-place finish would under the current system.

Under the current rules, a 12th-place finish pays 127 points, while 40th is worth just 43.

NASCAR officials have said they're interested in tweaking the format for the Chase, possibly instituting an elimination element where drivers at the bottom of the standings would drop out as the Chase neared its conclusion. But in reality, they do that now, only it's not official until they're mathematically eliminated.

31st MEU ACE arrives aboard the Essex

CPL. MICHAEL A. BIANCO
31st MEU

USS ESSEX AT SEA – The aviation combat element of the 31st Marine Expeditionary Unit flew aboard the forward-deployed ships USS Essex and the USS Denver Sept. 7.

Equipment, gear and personnel were all prestaged at Marine Air Station Futenma, Okinawa, before the fly-on. The pilots then moved the aircraft aboard the ships of Amphibious Group 11 in waves.

According to Capt. Bradley Gibson, Marine Medium Helicopter Squadron 262 (Reinforced) air embarkation officer, the fly-on went smoothly and gave the squadron a great start to the deployment.

"It can be difficult moving different aircraft at the same time because of the diverse procedures in each," he said. "It is exciting to see all these moving parts working together efficiently and it gives us a good sense of how the patrol will go."

The ACE is comprised of elements from three rotary squadrons and one fixed-wing squadron.

The two units combined to fly CH-46E Sea Knights, CH-53E Super Stallions, AH-1W Super Cobras, UH-1N Hueys and AV-8B Harriers onto the ships of Amphibious Squadron 11.

Along with aircraft, the squadron loaded and flew more than 30 passengers and 70,000 pounds of equipment onto the Essex.

Aviation Marines teamed with Navy boatswain's mates to get the job done. The Navy team provided support to the landing Marine aircraft as they worked the ships' flight decks with air traffic controllers, fuel specialists, a chain crew used to secure the aircraft to the ship, and a crash and rescue team.

The 31st MEU and Amphibious Squadron 11 are currently preparing for several exercises designed to meet with the units' annual requirements. The units are also slated to participate in a bilateral exercises called Amphibious Landing Exercise 2011, which will take place in the Republic of the Philippines and the Korean Incremental Training Program in South Korea to enhance theater security cooperation.

Active duty, retired military personnel and their dependents may place classified ads in The Windsock at no charge. You must go to the Joint Public Affairs Office in Bldg. 4817 and fill out an ad request form.

There is a 20-word limit on military free ads and a two-ad (separate category) per household maximum per week.

Deadline for submitting free classified ads is noon, Monday

When Monday is a Federal holiday, ads must be submitted by noon, Friday

To re-run, free ads must be resubmitted

Policy for Free Classified Ads

Providing free advertising for business ventures is prohibited by government printing regulations and conflicts with the civilian publisher's advertising (which pays for the entire Windsock.) Therefore, as stated on the free ad request form, free classified ads "...must not be of a commercial or business nature."

This includes baby-sitting, property for rent, and yard work. Such advertisements may only be run as paid ads. Likewise, ads promoting fund raising activities sponsored by any organization, or events for which a fee is charged, are also not authorized under the free ad provision.

The Windsock will only publish free ads for animals which the owner is giving away. Real estate for sale must be exclusively "By Owner."

Failure of an ad to appear in The Windsock usually indicates the submission did not meet the criteria for free publication.

General

Are your eyes drawn to typos? Does the phrase "very unique" make you cringe? You could be a candidate for the Copy Editor opening at The Free Press, a 10,000-circulation AM in Kinston, NC.

COPY EDITOR

The position requires excellent language skills, knowledge of AP style, experience with Adobe InDesign and PhotoShop, and good organizational skills. The work involves coordinating the movement of stories, photos and other news elements between our newsroom and an off-site copy desk, proofing finished pages, assisting line editors in editing stories and designing some pages. The shift, usually 1-9 p.m., includes weekends. This is a good opportunity for an entry level copy editor with the right coursework and intern experience.

Applicants should send a cover letter, resume and work samples to Managing Editor Bryan Hanks, The Free Press, PO Box 129, Kinston, NC 28502; or e-mail bhanks@freedomenc.com

"THIN"

For any general merchandise item in any given week, the market of shoppers is very small (thin).

4.9% shopped for women's shoes

Technological innovation and the economic downturn has changed the way that U.S. consumers shop. Consumers have become more destination shoppers, making more considered purchases and doing their homework before heading to the store. Three-quarters of all U.S. adults read a newspaper in print or online in the past week; over 170 million adults. For shoppers, newspaper advertising is an opt-in medium in an opt-out world.

95% of U.S. adults report that the recession has impacted their shopping in some way. 76% report doing fewer shopping trips. Adults also plan purchases more (67%). Actual purchases continue to be predominantly made in stores (79%) though shopping information channels have dramatically expanded.

59% of adults rank newspapers first as the media used to help plan shopping or make purchasing decisions in the past 7 days. 80% of newspaper readers report looking at advertising when reading the paper.

41% say newspapers are the medium used most to check out ads, more than all electronic media combined. (TV, radio, Internet)

77% of newspaper readers took an action as a result of a print newspaper ad in the past 30 days. 59% clipped a coupon, 52% bought something advertised and 45% visited a store.

60% of newspaper readers followed up a newspaper ad online in some way. 44% went to a website after seeing a print newspaper ad and 28% conducted an online search after seeing a newspaper ad.

82% of readers used a preprinted insert in the past 30 days. On average, adults keep inserts 4.4 days. 59% used to compare prices, 55% used to compare one circular to another, 52% saved until visiting the store and 43% used to make an unplanned purchase.
