Toothbrushes, toothpaste donated to Enniburr, Ebeye third grade students

By Sheila Bigelow
Managing Editor

October is Dental Hygiene Month and almost every year for the past eight years, Kwajalein Range Services Dental Hygienist Judy Shimamoto, Dental Assistant Daleaina Chong-gum and other various volunteers throughout the years, have taken trips over to Enniburr and Ebeye to educate third grade classes on the importance of dental hygiene. This year, Shimamoto and Chong-gum were accompanied by Heather Little and high school students Lauren Amador, Dori deBrum and Yomoko Kemen. The team visited seven schools on Ebeye and visited morning and afternoon classes on Enniburr; in total, the team spoke to and educated around 400 Marshallese students.

Shimamoto led a demonstration on how to properly brush your teeth and discussed how vital it is to wash your hands and keep germs out of your mouth. After each demonstration, toothbrushes and toothpaste were handed out to each student.

Shimamoto concentrates on third grade students for a number of reasons. They are beginning to do things on their own and understand the concept of health and the difference between good and bad behaviors in terms of keeping themselves healthy. It is also the age where they are losing most of their baby teeth and their permanent teeth are growing in. Shimamoto explained that even though some of their baby teeth are in bad shape, when they lose them and grow their permanent teeth, it's not just like starting over; the bacteria that caused the decay in the first place is still in the mouth and needs to be remedied by routine teeth brushing.

In the past, Shimamoto has relied on donations to purchase supplies needed for this trip, mostly toothbrushes and toothpaste. Some time ago, Shimamoto's aunt passed away and left her $276. So she put it to good use and found a company, Tess Corporation, which sold her cheap toothbrushes. Shimamoto has been able to rely on that money and continued donations from the community to keep her toothbrush stock

41st Annual Kwajalein Open held Oct. 10-18 at Holmberg Fairways

Managing Editor

The 41st Annual Kwajalein Open Golf Tournament started out with almost perfect weather Oct. 10; it was overcast with just a little breeze, giving participants a break from the intense Kwajalein heat that usually beats them down during 18 holes of golf.

Of course, this being Kwaj, it wouldn't be a golf tournament without 'Lake Kwajalein' that formed in between holes one and two. The added and unplanned water trap caught a few golfers with bad luck; they had to use palm tree branches or their clubs to dig their balls out or just go for a swim to reach it.

I learn something new every year at the Kwajalein Open. Last year I learned what a "sandbagger" was and this year I learned the phrase "lights out," as in "he shot lights out on the back nine." I have quickly come to realize that having your name associated with "lights out" sometimes means you are also associated with the word "sandbagger."

Weekend one ended well, a lot of golfers happy with how they played. The second weekend wasn't so nice. After a torrential downpour Oct. 17, play on Monday was a little soggy and threw off some players' game. The sun came out around noon and brought with it blistering heat; that helped, but hindered some.

Unlike previous years, the women played with the men instead of in a separate category. Still they managed to steal some spots in the top three and plenty of prizes during the special events throughout the week. Rhina Hampson won a spot in four special events and both Pam Frase and Kim Parker claimed numerous prizes as well.

USAKA personnel also did well this year. Newcomers Hohn Wolf and Charles George gave the C Flight a run for their money, earning both the second and third place finishes.

Either way, with the donations from Kwajalein Range Services, Chugach, Berry Aviation, Matson and Continental, even those that didn't do that great still have a chance to win big at the banquet dinner to be held Monday evening at the Vet's Hall.

Community gets to know Kwajalein High School seniors through street paintings

By Melissa Peacock
Media Specialist

About 25 years ago, the high school seniors of Kwajalein Jr/Sr High School decided to pull a prank. They crept from their houses in the middle of the night and sprayed graffiti on the road just in front of the school, each of them painting their name. This practice has continued since that day and has even evolved into a school organized event.

Students that are seniors in high school now participate annually in this event, which is known as "Senior Street Painting." However, a little more preparation tends to be involved in the event. Some students start thinking about what they want their painting to be months in advance. Once they have decided what they want to paint, they must get a small draft approved by their class advisors. Once that is done, most students create a stencil to make the actual task of painting easier. They do this using an overhead projector and large pieces of paper taped to a wall. While some only require one stencil, other more complicated designs require several.

The next step is the actual painting. While the painting used to start only after dark, over the years the time has been scheduled earlier and earlier to allow the paintings to dry thoroughly and to provide light so students can see. Students used to do their paintings entirely on their own, but parent participation in the event has increased significantly over the years. Students tape their stencils to the streets and start their painting, while others paint free-style. Some are done before dark, while others are there well after.

Street paintings are not simply acts of graffiti anymore; they allow others in the community to learn a little bit about each individual senior. The diversity of this year's class is evident in the unique paintings of each student. Leimamo Wase's painting of a girl playing basketball shows others that she is an athlete. Dan Valles' painting of a guitar tells the community that he is a musician. The most complicated design on the road, and definitely the most time consuming, shows Leia Klinger's artistic ability. Julie Alves' painting, which features beautiful flowers and a turtle, exemplifies the well known fact that she is, and always will be, an island girl. Even Coty Davis' simple free-style design shows how laid-back he is.

Leia Klinger had one of the more complex street paintings.

Like most seniors, Stephanie Premo gets a little bit of help on her design from her dad.

This year's seniors experienced unfortunate weather. Just after dark, a huge downpour caused students to have to leave, and even washed away some of the painting the students had worked so hard to do. Nonetheless, the class did not give up, and many seniors were seen the next day after school finishing and fixing up their paintings, which turned out well in the end.

No matter what the design or the weather, street-paintings have become part of the privileges students receive as seniors at Kwajalein Jr/Sr High School. It is an exciting and interesting event that brings together the community and excites underclassmen, who look forward to participating in the event when they one day become seniors.

aplenty. Over the years, word has gotten out that Shimamoto is dedicated to this venture; in return, community members began donating. One year, the Kwajalein Girl Scouts did a bike wash and donated the money earned to Shimamoto for the purchase of toothbrushes. Donations are still being accepted; Shimamoto plans to continue this operation every October.

In the past, there was only enough money to purchase toothbrushes, but this year she had her heart set on supplying toothpaste as well. She was unable to find a supplier that could provide cheap enough toothpaste for her to purchase when a good Samaritan stepped in to help. COL Joseph Gaines, U.S. Army Kwajalein Atoll Commander, heard about Shimamoto's operation and wanted to help. He contacted his wife Dianne, who is a teacher in Alabama. She and a few volunteers held a toothpaste drive at her school and collected over 200 tubes of toothpaste. Gaines brought the large shipment back with him to Kwajalein. Gaines was not the only good Samaritan this year to help Shimamoto; Kris Kovas personally purchased 50 tubes of toothpaste to donate.

"Dental hygiene is really important and people don't always realize that it really impacts your general health," Shimamoto said. When various risk factors and behaviors are looked at, it has been found that flossing every day can add 6.4 years to your life. "Your mouth is part of your body and if you have an infection in your mouth, you have an infection in your body." Inflammation in your mouth can cause cardiovascular problems like a heart attack and stroke. Young women that have gum disease are seven times more likely to go into labor prematurely. So good dental hygiene is more than just keeping your mouth healthy; if you keep your mouth healthy, you will help keep the rest of your body healthy as well. Shimamoto continued, "It's important and it's important to get kids started on good habits early."

Important safety tips for Kwajalein parents, trick-or-treaters this year

Hourglass Reports

Halloween can be a magical time for children; they get to play dress-up and be anyone or anything they want to be for one evening a year.

Besides their costumes, the favorite feature on Halloween for most kids is the candy. Make sure children only accept wrapped candy. Most non-chocolate candy in tight packaging will keep for up to a year. Store chocolate candy in a dry, cool place. A grayish-white sheen of cocoa butter develops on chocolate that gets too hot (over 78 degrees) or is refrigerated; it is still edible. All chocolate can be stored in the freezer for up to one year. Dark and milk chocolates have different shelf lives. Dark varieties will last a year at room temperature or refrigerated; milk chocolates will last only about six months. Filled chocolates should be used within three months.

While Kwajalein is a small community and you know pretty much everyone, there are still precautions that all parents and children should abide by to keep everyone safe on Halloween night.

There will be no vehicle traffic allowed in the residential area from 6-7:30 p.m. on Halloween night. The only exceptions are police and emergency vehicles. KPD will be on a bike patrol that night.

Again, even though you know most of the community members here, children should never be allowed to go trick-or-treating without an adult. You should also only visit residences that have their outdoor light on. Trick-or-treating in the dark can lead to accidents; always carry a flashlight with you and have your children wear light-colored costumes. Add reflective tape to costumes and candy bags. KPD will be passing out glow-sticks to children.

Make sure your child's costume fits them; costumes that are too big or too long can cause them to trip and fall. A loose-fitting mask might restrict breathing or obstruct vision. Make sure masks fit properly and have large holes for eyes and mouth. It's better to paint the face instead. Even though they are excited and a little hyper from candy consumption, make sure your children walk, and do not run. Be careful of pumpkins lit with candles or any other open flames near your child's costume.

It is a good idea to set a specific time to be home for older children (high school students) that can go out in groups together.

What better way to celebrate a fun holiday than inviting our Marshallese friends over to Kwajalein to trick-or-treat with us. You can contact the Provost Marshal's office to sponsor any Marshallese children, age 12 or under. You are allowed to sponsor 10 children per family.

Lastly, make sure you check all candy and treats before your child eats anything. Those giving out candy should try to refrain from passing out anything that contains nuts and may lead to a food allergy reaction. Make sure candy given is age appropriate and steer clear of small objects that could be a choking hazard for the little ones.

Safety is everyone's concern this Halloween. Let's all be careful and look out for one another so we can all enjoy this fun holiday together.
