Soldiers expand rescue skills in Fort Leonard Wood homeland defense courses

The Maneuver Support Center of Excellence Homeland Defense Civil Support Office develops capabilities and provides training to improve the U.S. Army's effectiveness for operations in the homeland. One way it accomplishes that mission is through the urban search and rescue courses taught at Fort Leonard Wood.

Forging the battlefield: How FLW's largest training area yields future-ready engineers

What was once a small rural community and farmland is now the largest training area on Fort Leonard Wood. Training Area 244, also known as the Normandy Training Area, stretches over 900 acres and serves as the primary joint-service training environment for Department of War construction engineers.

SEAM: Modern gear management personalized for Soldiers

As the nature of warfare rapidly evolves, the U.S. Army is launching a powerful tool that will transform how today's forces prepare for tomorrow's fight, delivering the accuracy, agility and speed needed to succeed on the modern battlefield — the Soldier Equipping and Asset Management System, or SEAM.

Missouri DNR: Catch-and-keep trout season opens March 1

Every March 1, hundreds of die-hard anglers line the banks at one of Missouri's trout parks for opening day of catch-and-keep trout season. In past years, anglers have faced frigid winter temperatures, snow, sleet and ice, as well as sunshine and springlike weather, all in the attempt to catch an elusive lunker trout.
