

Jeremy McComb Press Release

Country artist Jeremy McComb will be touring with Armed Forces Entertainment (AFE) this summer. The tour, which runs from August 30 to September 6, will feature six live performances.

Jeremy McComb didn't come up through the system—he came up through it—through back rooms, bad deals, long drives and nights where quitting would've made sense. While others chased heat, he chased control. While the industry waited for permission, McComb kept moving—writing, touring, managing, learning every side of the business until there was no angle left he didn't understand. This career wasn't discovered. It was constructed under pressure.

A sixth-generation musician from Idaho, McComb carries the weight of lineage but none of the luxury. His songs live in the cracks—between pride and regret, faith and failure, staying and walking away. Influenced by the brutal honesty of storytellers like Jim Croce and Tom Petty, he fuses country, rock and folk into something darker and lived-in, where the truth matters more than the shine. His catalog has found its way onto projects selling over 6 million copies, including a Grammy-nominated, triple-platinum soundtrack, not because it was safe—but because it was real.

That truth has crossed borders. McComb has now been nominated twice for International Single of the Year by the British CMA Awards—first for “Granite Stone” in 2024 and again for “Laying Low” in 2025—proving that honesty travels farther than hype. With 120+ days a year on the road, a fiercely independent operation and a refusal to dilute the message, McComb continues to build something rare in modern music: a career that answers to no trend, no gatekeeper and no one else's clock.
